Another bill of importance is one requiring railroad companies to pay special taxes for permanent improvements.

Telegraph and telephone companies are declared common carriers and placed under the jurisdiction of the railroad and warehouse commission in another new bill.

Another bill makes contracts with unlawful trusts null and void and provides civil remedies.

In the Senate.

Senator Stephens introduced a bill following out the recommendations of the Minnesota Educational association for industrial agricultural schools. It provides for an agricultural high school in each of nine designated districts. It also provides for an experiment farm in connection with each school.

A bill was also introduced providing for a constitutional amendment on the subject of taxation.

In all seventeen bill were introduced in the senate, most of them of minor importance.

BUSINESS NEARLY DOUBLED.

Figures to Show Minnesota's Remarkable Growth in Last Ten Years.

During the last ten years the land business of the state of Minnesota has more than trebled, and the total volume of financial transactions of the state have nearly doubled.

This is demonstrated by surprising statistics prepared by the state auditor, relative to the business of his office. For the two years ending July 31, 1896, the end of the fiscal year, the total accumulation from state lands and credited to the different trust funds was $737,894.65; for the two years ending July 31, 1906, it was $2,239,305.82.

For the two years ending July 31 1896, the total cash received was $10,909,812.23, and the total amount disbursed during the period was $10,539,751. For the two years ending July 31, 1906, the total amount received was $19,651,114.07; the total amount disbursed was $19,507,532.62.

Since the formation of its state government Minnesota has never gone through a year without having a balance to the state's credit at the end of the year. In 1860 this record came near being broken, as the balance at the end of the year was only $675.78. The year 1899 was the one when the state came out with the largest balance ever shown by the auditor's ledger. Exclusive of money carried over from the previous year, it then totaled $2,607,115.97.

The first year of the formation of the state its receipts were $286,902.36, and disbursements $282,838.80. Ten years later, in 1868, receipts had increased to $836,550.02 and disbursements to $762,315.70; in another decade, 1878, receipts were $1,610,909.17 and disbursements $1,562,409.97; in 1888 receipts were $3,746,470.97, disbursements $2,404,108.24; in 1898 receipts were $8,053,396.05, disbusements $8,116,683.62; in 1906 receipts were $10,162,396.05, disbursements $9,533,563.59.

An accident occurred at the Rosner & Matsch machine shop at New Ulm, in which three persons sustained severe injuries, and it is a miracle they were not killed outright. John Ramalov of Perham, a former employe of the Perham brewery, has brought suit against the company for damages of $2,345, alleging that through the carelessness of a foreman he was badly scalded.

STATE FARES WELL.

Prominent in the Report of House Rivers and Harbors Measure.

Minnesota fares well in the river and harbor bill. The six-foot channel projected for the Upper Mississippi is not indorsed in the bill, but an appropriation for maintenance and improvement under the four-and-a-half-foot project is increased to about $500,000. The present annual appropriation is $300,000, which does not permit of much new work, about $200,000 being expended each year in repair and maintenance of the existing works.

It is expected that this increase will enable the engineers to complete the four-and-a-half-foot project in a comparatively short time, after which the six-foot project will be taken up.

The bill carries an appropriation of $75,000 for rebuilding Sandy Lake and $70,000 for constructing the Gull lake reservoirs. Both these projects are a part of the plan for preventing floods in the upper Mississippi and involve the diversion of Willow river from the Mississippi river, above Aitkin, to make it flow into the Gull lake reservoir.

The plan of the low dam at Gull lake contemplates the storage of 3,000,000,000 feet of water, and the capacity can be increased if there is a demand for it.

The plan for what is known as the Aitkin cutoff was objected to by the engineers and the committee. The objection of the engineers was that it would be too expensive, and of the committee that the construction of this ditch is properly a state function and one not to be undertaken by the general government, as it is designed merely to save some lands from overflow and not to aid commerce along any section of the river.

In connection with the Gull lake and Sandy lake reserves it is said that they are to be constructed to conserve water in floodtime. This water can be let out when the river is at low water stage and thus maintain a good average depth at all times of the year.

The reservoir capacity of the upper river may be increased by the construction of another reservoir below Grand Rapids and above Aitkin, which will take care of the flood waters and help increase the depth of the river in the dry season.

In the Duluth and Superior harbor reports provision is made for completing the Superior entrance at additional cost of $697,000, of which $300,000 probably will be provided in cash, and continuing contracts authorized for the remainder.

To relieve the situation at Duluth a survey is authorized, with a view to increasing the capacity of the harbor basin to about 350 acres. An appropriation of $225,000 will be made for the maintenance of the Duluth-Superior work.

In addition to the above, usual appropriations will be made for the Minnesota, St. Croix, Red River of the North and Two Harbors, and a survey will be authorized for the harbor of Grand Marais, with a view to extending the westerly pier. A survey also will be ordered for the north shore of Lake Superior in Minnesota, with a view to establishing a harbor of refuge.

FIGHT WHITE PLAGUE.

Anti-Tuberculosis Congress Will Meet in Minneapolis.

There will be held in Minneapolis from Feb. 2 to 12 what is known as the anti-tuberculosis congress, which is intended to diffuse practical information as to the extent, spread, causes and cure of tuberculosis, admitted by both the medical profession and lay authorities to be the most deadly disease extant. The purpose of this gathering is not to discuss the subject wholly from a professional standpoint, but to elaborate and explain it by lectures, demonstrations and the use of a carefully prepared exhibit, so as to bring it forcibly to the notice of the general public. The daily program includes hourly stereopticon demonstrations of the exhibit, with special addresses by speakers of note from various cities. The exhibition is purely educational, with nothing in the way of "cures" advocated, and no special treatment is promoted or offered for sale. The public generally will be as much interested as the medical profession. Every citizen is interested in making possible the conditions under which tuberculosis is preventable and curable. Several hundred thousands have already visited and profited by this exhibition in the cities of the East and South, and it is now proposed to carry the campaign of education into the West.

LEGISLATIVE CORRESPONDENCE

A Calm View of the Present Situation.

To the Editor: I am devoting such portion of my time as I can command this winter to correspondence from the legislature, and it seems to me that the situation is one which makes it the duty of thoughtful men who feel that they can fairly and impartially consider the relation which the railroads occupy toward the people to speak for the public interests. For nearly half a century I have watched with much interest and concern the development of the great Northwest. I have never in my life owned a share of railroad stock or been in the employ of a railroad or other corporation to advance their interests, either in accord or against the popular sentiment, and still modestly thinking to some extent that I occupy the position of a publicist, I feel as a sense of duty the importance to the public to urge a thoughtful consideration of the present situation. I make no claim to speak for the railroads, but I do feel that as one who for nearly fifty years has sincerely and honestly written and spoken in advance and care for the public welfare that I have some right to express my views without my motives being impugned. The railroads are very far from perfection. They are not connected with [illegible] but they have rights and there are two sides to the question as between them and the public, and you cannot cripple or damage them without crippling or damaging yourselves.

Mr. J. J. Hill, president of the Great Northern, addressed the Northwestern Lumbermen's association at Minneapolis a few days ago, and certainly gave some thoughts for serious consideration. To demonstrate my statement that there really are two sides, I ask permission to briefly quote some of the views he expressed. —H. P. Hall.

Among other things Mr. Hill said:

"Now I want to ask your most earnest attention, and I want to urge upon you simply a condition and not a theory. And that condition is that there will be no relief for the movement of lumber without delay from the Pacific coast, for the long distance described, until there can be more tracks on which to move the cars. There are cars enough to-day if, instead of twenty-four they could move fifty miles a day, which would be four hours out of the twenty-four, one-sixth of the time—there are cars enough to-day to move a great deal more lumber than you want to buy. But without the track and without the terminal facilities it cannot be moved, and it will not be moved and the car famine will continue until these facilities and appliances are furnished, and your business, and the consumers' business, and everybody else's business will have to suffer and will have to pay.

"For that reason you can all do good; you can all help, and the help that you can render is by taking a careful and intelligent view of the situation. To so understand the situation that you can say to your neighbor, 'There are two sides to this question. Let us be fair. Let us establish confidence.'

"The people who build the railroads are the people who have small investments. Now, take the Great Northern railway. Out of 3,200 shareholders, my holdings are comparatively small—less than 7 per cent. And there are 1,100 women on our list of shareholders. And when the people's property is held up as something to be adopted by the state, taken away from them—something that is branded with the brand of unpopularity, at best—is that going to induce these people to invest? Take it to yourselves—as many of them are as little able to put money into investments of that kind as you are—is that the sort of investment you prefer? Or will you look somewhere else?

Money Must Be Raised.

"We undertook to make an expenditure of over $50,000,000 next year in additional tracks, and this new line I spoke of, improvements, equipment and so on, amounting in the neighborhood of $50,000,000, and tried to raise $60,000,000 from our shareholders. We asked them to put their own money in their own business, and take the chances that they would receive a dividend if the company earned it. But we are defending a lawsuit to-day, the contention being that they shall not put their money into their own business, to furnish the facilities that they are honestly bound from every standpoint to furnish.

"Before these questions will be settled in this country there must be a clearer and better understanding and better appreciation on the part of everybody as to what is best to be done. The shareholders, what do they get? They get their dividend if the company earns it. Speaking for our own company, our shareholders get the same dividend they have received for years; that is, the same rate. But if we cannot handle our business, and if we cannot raise the money to create facilities to enable us to handle our business, not only the railroads must suffer but you must suffer with them.

Mr. Hill pleaded for a spirit of conciliation and fair play, saying:

"I want to ask you, as rational and reasonable men, to consider your own interests, and see where they point. See how the situation may be remedied. Ask yourselves. Is any man able, who can drive a horse to drink, to make him drink after he gets him to the well? Now, we have both got to come together; our minds have got to come together; and we have got to depend on each other; we have got to depend on you, and you have to depend on us. Then we can get along very, very much better. What we have to do, and the difficult thing we have to meet, is to find money to make these improvements. I want to say to you that there has not been a time since 1893 when it has been so difficult to raise money for railway purposes as it is at present."

The speaker said the money necessary to furnish relief must be forthcoming within five years, a colossal and an enormous task. The money markets of the old world had been fished until there were no more fish there. It had become the fashion for politicians of a certain class, men whose own characters would not bear the flashlight of inquiry, to abuse the railroads. The railroads were always willing to discuss affairs of transportation in a fair spirit.

Freight Rates.

On the question of freight rates Mr. Hill said:

"When we compare them with the rates in Europe they are less than half as much, as a rule. The average rate in Great Britain is $2.31 for hauling a ton of freight a hundred miles; in Russia it is about $1.75, and in the United States it is 75 cents. These figures are official. Those are the average rates. It is true that our average is a little more than one-third less than 40 per cent of the average of Europe, and we pay a higher scale of wages. They pay locomotive engineers from 60 cents to $1.25 and $1.50 a day. We pay $4.50 and probably will be paying in the neighborhood of $5 within a week. (Laughter.)

"And so all down the list. You know the difficulty of getting good labor at any price. If the railroad systems of the United States can furnish transportation at an average cost of less than half that charged all over the continent of Europe, where, as you know, practically all the railroads are owned by the state, with the scale of wages infinitely lower than we are paying here, our system cannot be a failure and accomplish that result.

"It is not a failure. It is the wonder of the railroad people of these other countries. I have had people come from India, from Germany, from France, from Austria, from Russia and from Japan to know how it is done. They come to find out, if they can, how we can furnish such service at a rate so much lower than they are compelled to pay. Now, until the situation changes very materially, until the facilities for handling the business are very materially increased, your interests are going to suffer, do what you can and all we can.

"Now, you gentlemen from Iowa: A few years ago—time goes rapidly, and it might be eight or ten years ago—I was called to the office of the railway commission of Minnesota. They wanted us to reduce the rate on grain. I said, 'Would you be satisfied to have us put the rate on grain as low as it is from Western Iowa to Chicago?' 'Why, yes, they would. It would be all right if we would give them the Iowa tariff. We looked it up, and found that our rate was about 25 to 30 per cent lower than it was from Western Iowa to Chicago. I think that holds good to-day.

"Let me ask you again to consider the question as it affects you, and as it affects the railroads; and see if it is not worth while to give both parties fair treatment."

Room on Any Floor.

"Give you the only room left in the house to-night," said Room Clerk Allen of the Baltimore, San Francisco, as he dipped a pen and started to hand it to the new arrival.

"Where is it?" said the man from Modesto, which they say is another Missouri for mules and "show me" people. "What floor's it on?"

"Any floor you like; top, middle or office."

"Don't kid me, young fellow. I want to sleep on the top floor."

"All right. Front! Boy, put a cot in the cage at midnight and tell Bennie to let the elevator remain at the top floor till morning."

Careless Writers and Shippers.

Advertisers complain that during the year they get many thousands of letters which are deficient in address, either the state is left off or no town, county or state or wrong state, and many of them without a name signed to them, or if it is signed, it is done with such haste and carelessness as to be unintelligible. It should be remembered that it is far easier to read a poorly written letter than it is to decipher the name, consequently the utmost care should be taken to write the name carefully without any flourishes. Flourishes are actually an abomination. Another source of annoyance and delay in making returns, is the carelessness or lack of knowledge on the part of shippers sending goods to market, and in not putting the shipper's address as well as the firm you ship to on the bundle or box. Besides this shippers should send the original or duplicate receipt and letter of advice describing the shipment and be sure to stamp the envelope. Some neglect this and some put only one cent on. Such letters go to the dead letter office. The Northwestern Hide and Fur Company of Minneapolis, Minn., recently stated that they had several hundred statements of hides, furs, etc., awaiting claimants for want of proper address. If any of our readers are among this list of careless shippers, write them at once. They do not want your goods for nothing, neither does any other honest firm.

"What a fearful storm we had last night—worst this year, I should say!"

"Really? I was at the women's suffrage meeting in the town hall, and we didn't hear a sound of it."

Much radical legislation has already been proposed at present session of the legislature, and there is more yet to come. It is doubtful, though, whether many meritorious bills will get through the senate, as there are plenty of evidences that the "interests" have control of that body. It is hoped that at least the two-cent fare, the anti-pass and the reciprocal demurrage bills will be adopted. These alone will afford a large measure of relief to the people of the state.

The Ninth district received a handsome recognition in the appointment of P. M. Ringdahl, of Crookston, on the board of control. Mr. Ringdahl is regarded as a high-class man and has an enviable record as a public official. He served in the state senate for one term and was a member of the railroad and warehouse commission under Governor Lind.

The Atchison Globe does "not know how it is in big cities, but in small towns the society women can be distinguished from the women who are not in society by the fact that society women do not wear union suits and the other women do." There are many others who do not know, and probably never will, although the saying in Missouri is "in union there is strength."

Lieut. Gov. Eberhart has a political reputation at stake. His committee assignments are not satisfactory to the people of the state, and if by reason of his apparent favoritism to the "combine" meritorious legislation is defeated the lieutenant governor can consider himself in the "23" class. The people are in no temper to be betrayed by their public servants.

It will soon be time for the statistical wonders at the State Capitol to start out their figures on the number of bills introduced, framed, killed and under consideration. All of which is of little interest to the man who has business to attend to ADVERTISING ADVICE.

A number of our local merchants might profit by reading the following article written by one of the largest and most experienced advertisers in the United States: I am a great believer in patronizing the home paper. It can be a great help to you, because this is a newspaper age. The regularity with which it goes into the home is a great factor in keeping your name, if it appears therein, persistently before the public. But for the same sum expended with a newspaper one merchant will get more for his money than another because he uses his space to better advantage.

WOOD FAMINE.

There is a scarcity of wood in Red Lake Falls. The great amount of snow and the bad condition of the roads are responsible. The snow is so deep that to haul cordwood is impossible and it may be some time before it can be done. The famine is not serious, as there is still some wood left in town.

The Murray Cure

To be Incorporated and Enlarged by Mr. Murray's Family.

The announcement of the sudden death of Edwin Murray, founder of the Murray Cure at Minneapolis, Fargo and Seattle, was a shock to many thousands of people who knew of the good work of the Murray Cure.

Mr. Murray's family, the widow, two grown sons and a daughter, will continue to conduct the Institute at Minneapolis. One of the sons has begun the study of medicine to fit himself as a drink cure specialist. In the meantime the house physicians and corps of attendants and employes will remain the same.

For over seven years the Murray Cure has demonstrated that the drink habit can be cured. If you have a friend that needs the Murray treatment, send him at once to the Murray Cure Institute. If the drink habit has a hold on you that you cannot break without help, remember we can help you.

Call or write, Murray Cure Institute 1319 Nicollet Ave, Minneapolis, or 321 So. 13th St., Fargo, N. D.

Harry Mitchell's Editorial

I do a bigger tailoring business than all the rest of the Minneapolis tailors combined, and about half of it comes through the mails from people who live out of town. Do you know what this means to you? It means that for $15, $20, and $25 I'll make you a suit or overcoat that you'd have to pay any other tailor $30, $35, and $40 for. Further, I'll guarantee perfect fit and satisfaction or cheerfully refund your money, and so that your clothes won't cost you any more than the city man pays, I'll pay all Express charges. Write me today for samples and self-measurement blank, and let me make you the swellest and most satisfactory garment you ever wore.

BALM OF SCRIPTURE

HEALING PROPERTIES OF PINE KNOWN TO ANCIENTS.

Oil of the White Pine Tree Used Successfully by Physicians in Treating Consumptive Patients.

The Oil of the Pine Tree is supposed to be the balm of Scripture. It contains great medicinal properties and was regarded with the utmost esteem by the ancients, and to the present day is peculiarly prized by the people of the East.

A noted authority on diseases of the throat and lungs, who established a camp for consumptives in the Pine Woods of Maine, says that his entire treatment consisted of fresh air, nourishing food and the Pure Virgin Oil of the White Pine Trees, mixed with Whisky and Glycerine in the following proportions:

Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure) . . ½oz.
Glycerine . . . . 2 "
Good Whisky . . . . 8 "

Used in teaspoonful doses every four hours.

It is claimed the above mixture will heal and strengthen the lungs, break up a cold in twenty-four hours, and cure any cough that is curable.

The ingredients can be secured from any good prescription druggist at small cost, and can be easily mixed in your own home.

Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure) is put up only in half-ounce vials for dispensing. Each vial is securely sealed in a round wooden case with engraved wrapper with the name—Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure), prepared only by Leach Chemical Co., Cincinnati, O.—plainly printed thereon. There are many fake imitations of Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure), which are put out under various names, such as Concentrated Oil of Pine, Pine Balsam, etc. Never accept these as a substitute for the Pure Virgin Oil of Pine, as they will invariably produce nausea and never effect the desired result.

AWFUL EFFECT OF ECZEMA.

Covered with Yellow Sores—Grew Worse—Parents Discouraged—Cuticura Drove Sores Away.

"Our little girl, one year and a half old, was taken with eczema or that was what the doctor called it. We called in the family doctor, and he gave some tablets and said she would be all right in a few days. The eczema grew worse and we called in doctor No. 2. He said she was teething, as soon as the teeth were through she would be all right. But she still grew worse. Doctor No. 3 said it was eczema. By this time she was nothing but a yellow, greenish sore. Well, he said he could help her, so we let him try it about a week. One morning we discovered a little yellow pimple on one of her eyes. Of course we 'phoned for doctor No. 3. He came over and looked her over, and said that he could not do anything more for her, that we had better take her to some eye specialist, since it was an ulcer. So we went to Oswego to doctor No. 4, and he said the eyesight was gone, but that he could help it. We thought we would try doctor No. 5. Well, that proved the same, only he charged $10 more than doctor No. 4. We were nearly discouraged. I saw one of the Cuticura advertisements in the paper and thought we would try tho Cuticura Treatment, so I went and purchased a set of Cuticura Remedies, which cost me $1, and in three days our daughter, who had been sick about eight months, showed great improvement, and in one week all sores had disappeared. Of course it could not restore the eyesight, but if we had used Cuticura in time I am confident that it would have saved the eye. We think there is no remedy so good for any skin trouble or impurity of the blood as Cuticura. Mr. and Mrs. Frank Abbott, R. F. D. No. 9, Fulton, Oswego Co., N. Y., August 17, 1906."

THE Brangwyn Mystery

With Alexis it happened that the moments of remorse coincided for the most part with the revival of the fear of detection. He had always been of too weak a nature to disguise a strong emotion, and his guiding plan had been to make one emotion pass for another. He had made the fear for his own neck pass constantly as a fear for the family honor, or as a fear for Aloysius. The mad hilarity which overcame him at Aloysius's scornful gift of safety after he had been forced to write down his confession had been employed as a pretence of overwhelming relief at the surety of his cousin's innocence and security.

Easily depressed, easily elated in small things, he had been depressed and elated beyond measure by the alternations of his terrors and escapes in this vital matter. This less than nothing of a new reprieve which came to him from the continued silence of Lepelletier was like a burst of sunshine to his mind. He smoked his after-breakfast cigar in high contentment, and had just put the last touch to a careful morning toilet when the telegram Aloysius had shown to Billery in the village postoffice arrived. His servant brought it into his bedroom, and he stood in the act of opening it, with an index finger beneath the lapel of the envelope, when he bethought him.

"You've forgotten my buttonhole this morning. Skip out and get it."

"I beg your pardon, sir. You didn't mention it, sir, and I thought you might like to choose it for yourself. Back in a moment, sir."

He tore the envelope open, and was so little anxious to read it that he lit a new cigar before he unfolded it. He staggered literally as if he had received a blow. The cigar fell from his lips and lay unheeded, and he stood staring, seeing nothing, conscious of nothing save this awful news. Aloysius had suffered much for him, but he would most certainly not suffer this. He would scarcely carry self-sacrifice so far as to go on the scaffold for the sake of a man whom he had such cause to hate.

The game was up. All his shuffles, all his evasions, his pretences, his jugglings with the truth, were over. He could think of nothing else than that so far. The game was up. A few hours' start was allotted him and that was all. By and by he went to the buffet which stood at the wall at one end of his splendid room. He opened it half-mechanically and poured out and drank a stiff glass of whisky. The glass and the decanter clattered together noisily in his shaking hands. He poured out a second glass and carried it to his bedroom, locking the door behind him.

At this moment the man returned and, finding the door closed, tapped discreetly.

"Wait a minute," said Alexis; "I shall want you directly." His voice did not betray him, though he had to clear his throat harshly before he could use it.

The man smelt the odor of whisky, unaccustomed at that hour and caught sight of the smouldering cigar, which had already made its mark upon the carpet. He set it in a place of safety and stood wondering what had happened. There had been, evidently, something disturbing in the contents of that telegram. Alexis, meanwhile, was busy on the other side of the locked door. There was a solid little safe let into one of the walls, an object left there by a former tenant, who had had it built and cemented into the brickwork. Alexis, with an eye to such a use as he was now to find in it, had taken it over at a valuation.

He had for years been ready for a swift flight, and in the troublous times which had been with him ever since Billery's identification of the body he had gone on increasing the store which it was his purpose to take with him should flight be necessary. France had always been the objective of his thoughts should such occur as now, beyond all doubt, was here. He had drawn largely on his bankers, professing that he was engaged in speculation, and once a week for the past two years he had exchanged five hundred pounds' worth of English notes for paper of the Bank of France, so that he had now accumulated in his hands a considerable fortune. The rest he must leave behind him, but with over fifty thousand pounds his own necessities were satisfied.

An artist, a man of imagination, with such compelling cause to set his imagination working, he had gone over his scheme of flight in every detail, over and over again. Years since, though he had never practiced, he had taken his degree as doctor of medicine in Paris, and keeping in mind always the possibility of denunciation and arrest he had provided himself with the means of sudden death. He had a tiny phial of prussic acid which he carried in his waistcoat pocket in a leather case.

Alexis had thought out the details of a disguise, and when he had assured himself of his money and had packed it away in a small handbag he made his first step toward it. There was a certain colorless and almost scentless liquid in a bottle in one of the drawers of his wardrobe. He saturated his hair and mustache with this liquid and left them so. It was a hair-bleaching preparation of his own invention, and he was well assured that the frost of seeming age would be upon his head before he had repeated the process half a dozen times. He placed the bottle and small sponge with which he had applied a portion of its contents in the bag beside the banknotes. Then he finished the whisky he had taken with him, lit a cigar, and sat down to think and to wait until he could arrange the mop into which he had made his hair.

He was not at this time conscious of much beyond a certain numbness of the mind. The shock of his cousin's telegram had come heavily upon him and had left him with little more than a nightmare sense that some great time of horror was approaching. And yet with all this he could make the clearest picture in his mind. He saw the men and women whom he knew best, and looked on whilst the news was told to them. He saw Aloysius before his accusers, and saw him produce the document which saved himself because it condemned the writer.

He saw himself flying southward with a score of divergences at obscure country places from which branch lines parted for other places, whence he could work sinuously back to the main line again. He saw himself, silver-haired and bowed, halting along the streets supported by a staff. He saw two keen-faced men—one French, one English—in a railway carriage—detectives, with a warrant for the arrest of Alexis Brangwyn. He saw Lilian with a look of incredulous horror in her eyes. He saw her face change to loathing and disdain.

It was all idle thinking, with a numb nausea at the back of it, but the pictures flashed upon his mind as vividly as if he saw them as things present themselves in dreams of unusual distinctness. When his hair had dried he restored it to its usual order, opened his door, and, carrying his calfskin handbag and bestowing it upon a table in the outer room, bade his servant pack for him the things needful for a possible absence of three days.

"I may be away longer," he said. "I may be back before."

He took a last look, a conscious look, at all the costly objects of art with which he had surrounded himself; the gleaming marbles, one or two of them the work of his own hands; the bronzes with which the walls were rich, the fine etchings, the proofs before letters, the little gems of water color signed with well known names, many of them the gifts of friends.

"Now out and fetch a hansom," he said, when the man had finished packing; "and be quick about it."

He was driven to the railway station and arrived there with five minutes to spare. He bought a little pile of magazines and a novel. For all his benumbed mind, and for all that he was flying for his life, he had thought enough for his own comfort to thrust into his handbag an unbroken box of cigars he reserved for his own special smoking.

He encountered nobody whom he knew, and, as it chanced, he had the compartment he had chosen to himself. The train bore him on the old familiar, often-traveled line through the sunshine of the open fields. As he lay back in his corner smoking, and looking from time to time out of the window, and now and then at the pages of the book he held in his hand, there was nothing in his aspect which could have denoted to a stranger the purpose of his journey. He thought idly that in all his speculations on this time he had never realized how little exciting it would prove. And yet he knew quite well that there were a horror and a terror waiting for him from which he should never escape whilst life should last.

An acquaintance whom chance had thrown in his way, a working journalist whom Billery had brought one afternoon to the old garret studio in Paris, had told to Aloysius and himself the story of an execution. It was grimly told, with all the detail of the born observer of events, and told, too, by a born recounter, who had since achieved a sort of celebrity that way. It came to his mind now and he saw it all with that creative artist eye of his—the hangman pinioning his stony prey, the procession from the condemned cell to the gallows, the chaplain reading the burial service over the living man, the investiture in the white cap, the drawing of the noose about the neck. Alexis sat up with a pale face, and passed his forefinger round the inside of his collar, drawing it from the windpipe, where it seemed to exert an unpleasant pressure, and moistened his dry lips with his tongue.

He reached Dover and lounged aimlessly about the place, and made a pretence of luncheon and drank a pint of champagne. Looking at his companions at table he said to himself:

"If any of these people know me by sight and name they'll make an adventure of this meal to-morrow."

That set him to make new pictures in his mind, and to see people who were talking of him, and to think of what they said.

"I sat at luncheon at the same table at Dover with the infamous Alexis Brangwyn on the very day of his flight from justice. You remember the scoundrel. He murdered his uncle for his money and hid him in modeling clay and worked him up into a statue. Must have been a most astonishingly cold-blooded villain. He was bolting for his life, bolting to save his neck, sir; and to look at him you wouldn't have thought he had a care upon his mind. He asked me to pass the salt."

And Alexis asked the gentleman who sat opposite to do him that small favor.

All this time he seemed to be carried nearer to the yawning gulf of horror and terror which waited for him. Every footstep led the way. The steamer sailed toward the gulf. The night train to Paris panted and strained toward it. He was driven toward it in the fiacre in which he crossed the Seine, until he found himself at a hotel he had known years and years ago in his student days. He was Paris born and Paris bred, and spoke the language as familiarly as a native. He was an excellent mimic, and had perfect command of a dozen dialects.

He gave an address somewhere in the Midi, and his accent of Provence bore out the pretence admirably. He broke up a sheaf of his large notes that day for smaller paper of the Bank of France, calling at a dozen bureaux de change to do so. He passed on to Lille, and there he gave another name and was a man from Normandy. And so he went his devious way with all manner of shifts and dodges, stopping with one name and accent at one hotel upon his road, and at another with a new name and a new accent.

The days grew blistering hot as he steered his erratic southward course; and at last he found himself in the town of Grasse, an Englishman who spoke an execrable Cockney French with equal volubility and inexactitude, and who was here to purchase the perfumed lard for which the town is famous, and from which most of the scents of English toilet tables are derived. It was here he found the gulf toward which he had been journeying. He mounted to the room assigned him at his hotel, and the courteous waiter handed him a copy of a London newspaper.

"Oh, mercy, bocco," said the Cockney traveler, and sat down uninterestedly to read, and in the printed page the gulf of horror and terror opened. His eye lighted on the words, "Solution of the Brangwyn Mystery. Flight of the Criminal." He read the verbatim report of the proceedings at Bow Street quite intelligently. It was not that which brought the anguish which consumed him. The fire of remorse had smouldered its appointed time, and at its appointed time had lighted into flame.

His applied chemicals had brought his hair to a snowy whiteness by this time, and after he had endured the long-drawn, sleepless agony of that night his face and eyes matched it. He went quietly away, carrying his handbag with him, and saying that he would give directions for the heavier piece to be sent after him.

He walked away and away into the country, not knowing whither his footsteps led him. The land was bare and arid and the sun environed him with a shroud of heated steel. He sat down at last at a wayside auberge and quenched his thirst with a draught of sour wine. Then he went on again for a mile, or, maybe two.

There he paused and looked about him.

"There can be nothing worse than this," he said, aloud, "and there is no end to it. Well, then, let us make an end."

He drew the little leather case which held the phial from his waistcoat pocket. He removed the stopper and the odor of bruised peach stones filled the air. He raised the phial to his lips and tilted it, and in the very act he fell. He made one convulsive movement and then lay still.

The Usual Difference.

A rich but avaricious old man decided to make his will, and, calling his lawyer, instructed him to draw it up, and that he would leave all his money to a friend.

"What!" said the lawyer, "to a friend, when you have a nephew living?"

"He is a ne'er-do-well, a fool, and an idiot, who has never worked and whom I have not seen for six years."

"But in that time," said the lawyer, "he has become rich. A much richer man than you, in fact, and he would laugh at your fortune."

"In that case," returned the contrary old gentleman, "that makes a difference. I shall, therefore, make him my sole legatee."

Her Idea of Remembrance.

A Southern man tells of a conversation he overheard between his cook and a maid, both negroes, with reference to a recent funeral of a member of their race, at which funeral there had been a profusion of floral tributes. Said the cook:

"Dat's all very well, Mandy; but when I dies, I don't want no flowers on my grave. Jes plant a good old watermelon vine; an' when she gits ripe, you come dar, an' don't you eat it, but jes bus' it on de grave, an' let de good old juice dribble down thro' de ground!"

Considerate.

"Wriggles, I saw you shaking hands with the bride, but you didn't congratulate the bridegroom. Why was that?"

"I was afraid he would think I was insincere. I had a narrow escape from marrying her once myself, you remember."

Our alphabet has endured for ages though only used for a spell.

GOT OUT AN "EXTRA"

CIRCULATION OF THE NEWS A CENTURY AGO.

Old "Broadside" Recently Found in Boston Compares Oddly with the Practical Journalism of the Present Day.

An interesting example of the method of putting important news before the public a century ago was found in an old news-sheet, or "broadside" recently turned up in a second-hand book dealer's shop in Boston.

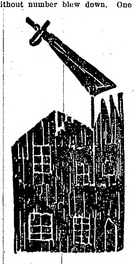
Any printer, whether he issued a newspaper or not, got out broadsides in those days, whenever he thought an extraordinary piece of news justified him in anticipating a profit. The broadside was a sort of handbill, printed on one side only, and generally about 8 inches wide by 15 long. This was sold in the streets.

The subject of the broadside mentioned above was a hurricane which swept the Massachusetts coast a few days prior to Oct. 15, 1804, the date on which the broadside was issued. The heading is "Violent Storm," under a black cut of the North church with its steeple toppling, above which is a row of coffins. The rules are turned giving a mourning effect. The account of the storm begins as follows:

"On Tuesday last a violent storm commenced here, and raged until Wednesday morning with unprecedented fury and destruction.

"The damage which has been sustained by this tremendous hurricane is very great and extensive. The following particulars are subjoined, viz: The steeple of the North church was blown down and several other churches damaged. The brick wall of a house in West Boston blew over and killed a young woman by the name of Lydia Bennet and badly wounded two or three more.

"Many houses were unroofed and several new buildings were so much bent and twisted that they must be taken down—chimneys, trees, etc., without number blew down. One of the western stages in passing West Boston bridge was upset by the force of the wind and several of the passengers considerably hurt.



Fall of North Church Steeple.
(Old News-Sheet Illustration.)

"About 35 vessels of different kinds were injured at the wharves and four entirely lost. Two men were drowned by a boat upsetting and likewise a lad by the sinking of a vessel. Chief of the small craft were destroyed.

"In short, it spread horror and devastation throughout the whole town."

The description states brifly the damage sustained in Charlestown, Salem, Marblehead, Plymouth, Cohasset and Quincy.

At Marblehead "33 vessels were driven ashore and some lost, and a number blown out of their harbor, their fate unknown.

"At cape Ann dreadful destruction and waste—five vessels in one of which was a lady passenger, lost and four or five others driven to sea and it is supposed are lost with all their crews."

It is to be noted that exact information is sadly lacking in these maritime reports. This may be due in part to the fact that one-third the space of the broadside was needed for "A Poem on the Late Hurricane," in 14 verses. One was as follows:

On Tuesday last a storm did rise,
And thunder roaring in the skies,
The gale increased from noon till night,
And many people in affright.

Another described the loss of shipping thus:

It fatal proved to ships, that day,
That chanc'd to be within our bay.
In vain they strived to reach the shore;
Alas! they sink to rise no more.

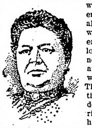
A Monster Wildcat.

M. H. Ruiz, yesterday brought to town the skin of the biggest wildcat ever seen in this part of the country, says the Arizona Republican. He killed it day before yesterday along the Arizona canal. There were four of the cats, one of them, says Ruiz, bigger than the one he killed, but it was not so belligerent.

This cat, instead of running away advanced upon him, growling and spitting. The animal was about to spring when Ruiz shot, the ball taking effect in the head, killing it instantly. The skin was more than four feet from tip to tip. The length of a wildcat is mostly in its body, for the tail does not greatly affect the linear measurement. This cat was bigger than some mountain lions and it was probably more destructive.

TERRIBLE TO RECALL.

Five Weeks in Bed With Intensely Painful Kidney Trouble.



Mrs. Mary Wagner, of 1367 Kossuth avenue, Bridgeport, Conn., says: "I was so weakened and generally run down with kidney disease that for a long time I could not do my work and was five weeks in bed. There was continual bearing down pain, terrible backaches, headaches and at times dizzy spells when everything was a blur before me. The passages of the kidney secretions were irregular and painful, and there was considerable sediment and odor. I don't know what I would have done but for Doan's Kidney Pills. I could see an improvement from the first box, and five boxes brought a final cure."

Thoroughly Reliable.

If ever there was a reliable and safe remedy it is that old and famous porous plaster—Allcock's. It has been in use for sixty years, and is as popular to-day as ever, and we doubt if there is a civilized community on the face of the globe where this wonderful pain reliever cannot be found. In the selection of the ingredients and in their manufacture the greatest care is taken to keep each plaster up to the highest standard of excellence, and so pure and simple are the ingredients that even a child can use them.

Allcock's are the original and genuine porous plasters and are sold by Druggists all over the world.

Up Against It.

Viskey, of the Russian secret police, clapped his hand on the tourist's shoulder.

"You must not stay in this country," he hissed.

"Then I'll leave," the tourist mildly answered.

"But have you a permit to leave?"

"No."

"Then come with me," said Viskey harshly, leading the man toward the Kremlin. "I'll lock you up till you decide what to do."

SAVING LOSS OF LETTERS.

Suggestion of Value Made by Assistant Postmaster General.

More that 11,000,000 pieces of mail went astray in these United States last year because they were not directed even well enough for the experts to decipher the names and addresses.

Millions of this immense total went to the dead letter office, where a lot of it was opened, the addresses of the writers ascertained and the letters or packages returned. But in a good many cases the writer's address is never found and the letter is really "dead" when neither the sender nor the prospective receiver can be discovered.

Assistant Postmaster General De Graw wants to get people in the habit of writing their own addresses on the outside of envelopes. This, he says, would save trouble for all hands, as the letter, if defective in address, could be returned at once to the writer. This simple precaution would save many a piece of mail from an early death and burial in the dead letter office.

WHITE BREAD

Makes Trouble for People with Weak Intestinal Digestion.

A lady in a Wis. town employed a physician who instructed her not to eat white bread for two years. She tells the details of her sickness and she certainly was a sick woman.

"In the year 1887 I gave out from overwork, and until 1901 I remained an invalid in bed a great part of the time. Had different doctors but nothing seemed to help. I suffered from cerebro-spinal congestion, female trouble and serious stomach and bowel trouble. My husband called a new doctor and after having gone without any food for 10 days the doctor ordered Grape-Nuts for me. I could eat the new food from the very first mouthful. The doctor kept me on Grape-Nuts and the only medicine was a little glycerine to heal the alimentary canal.

"When I was up again doctor told me to eat Grape-Nuts twice a day and no white bread for two years. I got well in good time and have gained in strength so I can do my own work again.

"My brain has been helped so much and I know that the Grape-Nuts food did this, too. I found I had been made ill because I was not fed right, that is I did not properly digest white bread and some other food I tried to live on.

"I have never been without Grape Nuts food since and eat it every day. You may publish this letter if you like so it will help someone else." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Get the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

BRING GOOD HEALTH

Dr. William' Pink Pills, Used After the Grip, Arrest Fatal Decline and Rebuild the System.

Any bodily weakness caused by a deficiency in the blood can be cured by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills because these pills actually make new blood. After attacks of the grip the blood is generally run down and the patient continues to decline.

"About three years ago," says Mrs. Jennie Cowan, of 718 N. Henry Street, West Bay City, Mich., "I caught a severe cold, which ran into the grip. I was confined to my bed for two weeks. At the end of that time I was able to be about, but was completely run down. I was so weak I could hardly stand, my cheeks had no color and I felt faint. My heart would flutter and it was difficult for me to breathe at times. Neuralgia settled in the back of my head and stomach and I suffered from rheumatism in my shoulders.

"I had the care of the best doctor in town but became no better until a friend told me one day how she had been cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and I decided to try them. I soon felt better and continued using them until I was entirely cured. They built me up again to perfect health and I use them now whenever I feel at all sick and they always help me."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are invaluable in such cases, as well as in other blood diseases, because they not only drive off the germs of the disease but build up the system. The pills have cured anaemia, rheumatism, after-effects of fevers, neuralgia and many other severe disorders.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y

WHICH WAS HIT?

That's What the Client Wanted to Know of His Lawyer.

Patrick Murphy, while passing down Tremont street, was hit on the head by a brick which fell from a building in process of construction.

One of the first things he did after being taken home and put to bed was to send for a lawyer.

A few days later he received word to call, as his lawyer had settled the case.

He called and received five crisp new $100 bills.

"How much did you get?" he asked.

"Two thousand dollars," answered the lawyer.

"Two thousand, and you give me $500! Say, who got hit by that brick, you or me?"

The Selfish Reason.

Bernard K. Green, the well known consulting engineer of Washington said the other day, in discussion of the new Pennsylvania capitol, which he helped to build:

"The trouble with every question is that self seeking enters into it. Were there no self-seekers, the world would be a very Utopia. But as it is——"

He smiled.

"Why yesterday," he said, "in a talk about flirtation in a cafe, I heard a well dressed man say earnestly:

"'I maintain that all water used for drinking and culinary purposes should be boiled at least one hour.'

"'You are a physician, I presume?' said a thin man, respectfully.

"'No, sir,' was the reply. 'I am a coal dealer.'"

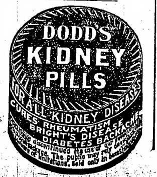
INVENTS A HUMANE BULLET.

Frenchman Devises a Projectile of Paper and Aluminum.

A French officer has invented a new projectile for firearms which is said to wound and kill as the usual bullets but does not present the ravaging action of the present projectiles of repeating rifles. This new missile is not of metal but of paper surrounded by a thin shell of aluminum.

According to the inventor, the paper bullet, fired at the same distance, under the same circumstances and with the same precision as the ordinary bullet, produces a thoroughly smooth wound. The number of disabled soldiers will be no less if the projectile of the future were to be the paper bullet, but the number of dead and fatally wounded would be considerably decreased; as the shot fired with a steel projectile tends to produce blood poisoning, while the paper bullet is said to only bring on a curable injury.

The inventor has sent his bullets for approval to all the governments belonging to the convention of Geneva and the Austrian war office has ordered trials to be made of the invention.



DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS

CRANKS AT CAPITAL

WASHINGTON SEEMS TO HAVE ATTRACTIONS FOR THEM.

Authorities Familiar with Many Strange Hallucinations, But Occasionally Meet a New One—The Old Timer.

Just as insects are attracted by the bright glare of an electric light, so are cranks attracted to Washington by the convening of congress, and each year brings new faces with new hallucinations. Some of the old timers, who have managed somehow to keep out of the foolish house, are here again, notably the fellow who has a scheme for bottling sunshine, but among the brand new ones is a tall fellow from the west who is clad in semi-military costume. His hallucination is well defined, and an ex-policeman who was tackled by the military personage remarked:

"If that fellow keeps outside of the gray walls of St. Lizzie's two days longer I will miss my guess, and I have been handling 'queers' for nigh unto 15 years."

It is said the newcomer declares he is "the commander of the armies and navies of the world, and the United States; also chief of police of the earth, and governor general of North and South America." He is here, he says, to have congress pass upon the trifling sum of 15 billions of dollars that he requires to keep his military and police forces intact for another year.

The capitol police are on the look out for the variegated commander and other of his kind, and when he goes to the big white structure to arrange for the passage of the bill for his billions, he will be taken into custody, and then—St. Lizzie's and a season of solitude.

Several members of Inspector Boardman's detective corps were in the front office at police headquarters one afternoon when a victim of old rye came along the steep grade of the street walking with such an uncertain step that it was feared he would meet with personal injury. When he had stepped from the pavement to the street and back again several times the suggestion was made that one of the officers make a case, but while they were discussing the pedestrian's condition the latter made a sharp turn and headed for the building.

"How are you, Cap?" was the familiar manner in which he addressed one of the detectives. 'I saw you rubbering and I thought I'd make a call. Do you want me for anything?"

"Want you for anything?" repeated one of the detectives. "Who are you?"

"Never mind about that" said the caller. "I want to know if my record is clear or if you want me for anything."

The sleuths admittted that they knew of no charges having been preferred against him and told the caller that he might be excused. He was not asking for an excuse, he said; he had merely called to pay his respects. Although none of the men in the office knew him, he was able to recall the boyhood days of many of them.

"It is rather refreshing to meet old friends," said the caller. "The meeting has refreshed me so much that I am now able to walk home, and tell mother all about it. Good day."

HAS SEEN MANY CHANGES.

Senator Teller Talks of Colleagues, Past and Present.

"Now the senate chamber itself doesn't seem widely different from what it was then, but everything else is changed. None of the men who were here then are here to-day, and 14 more seats are used. Seven states have been admitted since then, you know." This was said by Senator Teller of Colorado, and the time he spoke of was 30 years ago, when he first became a member of that body, of which he is still a member. December 3 was the thirtieth anniversary of Mr. Teller's entrance into the senate. It was on December 3, 1876, that he was sworn in for the first time.

"Colorado became a state in 1876," he continued, "which explains why my colleague, J. B. Chaffee, and myself, entered the senate at the beginning of a short session. I drew the term which ended on March 4 following, so that I wouldn't have been a senator very long if I had not been immediately elected to succeed myself for a term of the regular length. This reelection came on December 11, just eight days after I first took my seat. Only one other man who is a member of the senate now was a member then," said Mr. Teller, with a look in his eyes that went much further than the confines of the senate chamber. "That is Senator Allison. He is not here, and I am sorry. I would like to enjoy the anniversary with him."—Washington Dispatch to the Boston Transcript.

Senators Want 'Possum.

Senator Blackburn and some other southern statesmen have been hearing of 'possum hunts near Washington, almost within shadow of the capitol dome. They think of organizing a foray in that vicinity and may be expected to slip into the woods a short way up the Potomac almost any time. Complaint is made that it is practically impossible to get this delicacy in the Washington market.

FIRST WORD A KNOCK.

King Thought Sermon Had a Personal Application.

James I. of England and VI. of Scotland was, as every one knows, deficient in vigor and steadiness. Having heard a famous preacher who was very witty in his sermons and peculiarly so in his choice of texts, he ordered this clergyman to preach before him. With all suitable gravity the learned divine gave out his text in the following words: "James, first and sixth, in the latter part of the verse. 'He that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed.'"

"Odd-chickens! He's at me already," exclaimed the king.

Could Not Be Worse.

"Well, how are you getting on?"

"Don't ask me. Just as badly as next year."

"Next year?"

"Certainly. Nowadays every year is worse than the last, and things can't be worse with me next year than they are now."

How He Expressed It.

An old man had been made mayor of a little village, and, wishing to thank the inhabitants for the honor done him, called them all together. Then he began as follows:

"Fellow citizens: I shall never forget the day in which you deigned to put my white hairs over your heads."

MISS JULIE FLORENCE WALSH

WOMEN SUFFER

Many women suffer in silence and drift along from bad to worse, knowing well that they ought to have immediate assistance.

How many women do you know who are perfectly well and strong?

The cause may be easily traced to some feminine derangement which manifests itself in depression of spirits, reluctance to go anywhere or do anything, backache, dragging sensations, flatulency, nervousness, and sleeplessness.

These symptoms are but warnings that there is danger ahead, and unless heeded, a life of suffering or a serious operation is the inevitable result. The best remedy for all these symptoms is made from native roots and herbs. No other medicine in the country has received such widespread and unqualified endorsement. No other medicine has such a record of cures of female ills.

Miss J. F. Walsh, of 328 W. 36th St., New York City, writes:—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been of inestimable value in restoring my health. I suffered from female illness which caused dreadful headaches, dizziness, and dull pains in my back, but your medicine soon brought about a change in my general condition, built me up and made me perfectly well."

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cures Female Complaints, such as Backache, Falling and Displacements, Inflammation and Ulceration, and organic diseases. It is invaluable in preparing for child-birth and during the Change of Life. It cures Nervous Prostration, Headache, General Debility, and invigorates the whole system.

The Nature of an Oath.

The late Judge M. Russell Thayer of Philadelphia used to tell a good story about a brother jurist who was an enthusiastic golfer.

The golfing judge, according to the story, had occasion to interrogate in a criminal suit a boy witness from Bala.

"Now, my lad," he said, "I want to know if you are acquainted with the nature and significance of an oath?"

The boy, raising his brows in surprise, answered:

"Of course I am, sir. Don't I caddy for you at the Country club?"

Nothing Easier.

Prospective Purchaser — Is there any way to get rid of the odor of an automobile?

Dealer—Certainly, sir. Always run the machine at a rate of speed sufficient to keep ahead of it.

Mrs. Rurale — Did you ever find a man under the bed?

Mrs. Outskirts—Yes, the night we thought burglars were in the house I found my husband there.

CATARRH BLOOD DISEASED AND SYSTEM DISORDERED

Catarrh is not merely an inflammation of the tissues of the head and throat, as the symptoms of ringing noises in the ears, mucous dropping back into the throat, continual hawking and spitting, etc., would seem to indicate; it is a blood disease in which the entire circulation and the greater part of the system are involved. Catarrh is due to the presence of an excess of uric acid in the blood. The Liver, Kidneys and Bowels frequently become torpid and dull in their action and instead of carrying off the refuse and waste of the body, leave it to sour and form uric acid in the system. This is taken up by the blood and through its circulation distributed to all parts of the system. These impurities in the blood irritate and inflame the different membranes and tissues of the body, and the contracting of a cold will start the secretions and other disgusting and disagreeable symptoms of Catarrh. As the blood goes to all parts of the body the catarrhal poison affects all parts of the system. The head has a tight, full feeling, nose continually stopped up, pains above the eyes, slight fever comes and goes, the stomach is upset and the entire system disordered and affected by this disease. It is a waste of time to try to cure Catarrh with sprays, washes, inhalations, etc. Such treatment does not reach the blood, and can, therefore, do nothing more than temporarily relieve the discomfort of the trouble. To cure Catarrh permanently the blood must be thoroughly purified and the system cleansed of all poisons, and at the same time strengthened and built up. Nothing equals S. S. S. for this purpose. It attacks the disease at its head, goes down to the very bottom of the trouble and makes a complete and lasting cure. S. S. S. removes every particle of the catarrhal poison from the blood, making this vital stream pure, fresh and healthy. Then the inflamed membranes begin to heal, the head is loosened and cleared, the hawking and spitting cease, every symptom disappears, the constitution is built up and vigorous health restored. S. S. S. also tones up the stomach and digestion and acts as a fine tonic to the entire system. If you are suffering with Catarrh begin the use of S. S. S. and write us a statement of your case and our physicians will send you literature about Catarrh, and give you special medical advice without charge. S. S. S. is for sale at all first-class drug stores.

I had Catarrh for about fifteen years, and no man could have been worse. I tried everything I could hear of, but no good resulted. I then began S. S. S., and could see a little improvement from the first bottle, and after taking it a short while was cured. This was six years ago, and I am as well today as any man. I think Catarrh is a blood disease, and know there is nothing on earth better for the blood than S. S. S. Nobody thinks more of S. S. S. than I do. M. MATSON, Lapeer, Mich.

General Shafter.

A variety of opinions upon the merits of the late General W. R. Shafter is but natural. He reached the zenith in the day of great surprises. A difficult task fell to him, and it is no unkindness to say that if the situation had been known at the time to his superiors probably another choice would have been made for the commander of the Santiago column in the spring of 1898. Many impartial military judges have contended that for the rough and tumble work which was absolutely essential in that crisis Shafter was the very best selection to be made from the roster of brigadiers.

Experienced soldiers at the front in Cuba declared that the personality of the commander was a tower of strength in the uncertainty and confusion which ensued when the army, handicapped with a lack of supplies, found itself face to face with an alert enemy. Shafter's imperious will, his vigorous methods and his exacting nature were well known to every subordinate in the regular columns, down to the lieutenants and even to the men in the ranks. Though out of sight, his orders were more effective than the transient enthusiasm evoked by a leader on the spot would have been. For the field of July 1, 1898, at Santiago and El Caney the ideal leadership was impossible. It was a soldiers' fight. The crisis came when the question arose whether to advance or to retreat. Shafter went ahead and won. Perhaps some other leader would have made a cleaner job of it. And without doubt many another than Shafter in the same situation would have failed and prolonged the struggle. It ended well. The result was surely in the keeping of Shafter the most of the time, and he is clearly entitled to the commander's share in the glory won by an army which he led to a finish.

GEORGE L. KILMER.

How Anna Gould's Millions Went.

Count Boni's record of spending money is one to make the American public gasp. Besides being a scandalously wretched husband, this ingrate poured out the Gould millions with the recklessness of a rank upstart. To begin with, Anna Gould paid the count's debts when she married him and settled upon him the immense sum of $3,000,000. In a couple of years the fortune had been dissipated and with that nearly $5,000,000 of fresh debts contracted.

Some of the ways by which Boni disposed of the first $3,000,000 and also ran deeply into debt illustrate a foreign adventurer's estimate of money. For a home in Paris modeled after the villa which Louis XVI. built in the park at Versailles for Marie Antoinette he expended $3,000,000. A steam yacht cost $200,000, a hunt $25,000, a dinner to the king of Portugal $50,000, and other extravagances were even more glaring. For instance, a clock cost $30,000, a sable overcoat $11,000, a pair of wardrobes $280,000, and a painting worth but $50 cost $60,000. For another hunt the count expended $100,000 and for a Louis XVI. ball $200,000. Before marriage with the American heiress this scapegrace lived over a shop in the business district of Paris. Strange that a mere title, bogus at that, should hypnotize a daughter of the practical and clever Jay Gould into yielding up all of her immense patrimony and making an abject surrender of her womanhood as well.

San Francisco is to begin a vigorous war upon the grafters, and, suspicious of the legal prosecutor, the citizens are banding together to pay the expenses of special counsel, who will throw his whole heart and soul into the task of purging the city of the stain of political corruption and trickery. The city that could rise undaunted from the ashes of one of the greatest catastrophes that have ever shaken this country should be able to purge herself of the taint of political bribery. San Francisco has shown a courage and a fortitude that have seldom been duplicated in this country and is recovering from the numbing force of the recent earthquake in a manner truly American.

An eastern writer tells us that most of the applicants for foreign consulates ask for these posts in order to absorb enough of the foreign atmosphere to produce a story like "Ben-Hur" or the "Prince of India." The state department should promptly break up this nefarious scheme.

President Hughes of Ripon college says all small children are savages. Seneca said that men are children of a larger growth. So there now.

Mr. Carnegie "scored one" when he got the London Times to drop the "u" in "labor." Anything that shortens labor is welcome.

Wonder if Dr. Osler, who now lives over there, attended that English plowing match that was won by a man of seventy-four?

TIMBER STATISTICS FOR 1906.

Figures to Be Gathered by Forest Service and Census Bureau—Success of Last Year's Work.

Schedules for the collection of statistics of forest products for 1907 have been sent by the Forest Service to all engaged in industries directly dependent upon our forests. This work is a continuation of that done in 1906 by the Forest Service in co-operation with the National Lumber Manufacturers' Association. It then received the universal approval and support of the users of wood throughout the United States. The work was undertaken to meet the urgent demand for accurate data upon the annual drain upon our forest resources. The results proved so valuable that the information will be compiled annually, in accordance with the plan outlined by the Forest Service a year ago.

To add to the efficiency, accuracy and promptness of compilation of the data the Bureau of the Census and Forest Service are this year co-operating in gathering statistics. This plan insures to the manufacturers the announcement of results at the earliest possible moment after all the reports have been received. Several new features will distinguish the collection and publication of figures for 1906, now under way. The figures for the production of lumber were withheld last year until returns had been received by every State. This year the production of each State will be announced as soon as the returns are in. The failure of the manufacturers of a single State to furnish the information promptly will therefore delay the publication of results for that State only. The total production of the United States will be compiled when all State reports are complete.

The lines upon which inquiry will be made are practically identical with those of last year, covering lumber, lath and shingles, pulpwood, railroad ties, tan bark, veneer, wood distillation and cooperage. A single addition has been made in an inquiry as to the consumption of telegraph and telephone poles.

The Service believes that the statistics for 1906 will be more complete and more promptly obtained than those gathered last year. If so, their practical value to wood producers will be greatly increased. Success depends very largely upon the ready co-operation of the manufacturers throughout the country.

IMPORTANT MEETING

Election of Officers and Matters of Importance Will Be Discussed Monday Night.

The regular monthly meeting of the Commercial club will be held Monday night, when officers will be elected.

There are many matters of importance to be discussed, and a full attendance of members is desired.

The club is now starting its second year and many things are possible if the membership will display the same interest in the city's welfare as they do in their own business.

ANOTHER GOOD THING.

The Elks' Quartet of Crookston Has Been Secured for the Next Band Concert.

The Red Lake Falls Band will give their monthly concert the last week in February. A special number has been secured for the occasion. Manager Joe Tracy announces that he has secured the services of the Elks' Quartet, of Crookston, for the concert. This quartet is said to be second to none in this section of the country, and it behooves those who are accustomed to hear good singing to attend.

The last concert was an agreeable surprise to those who attended and the boys intend to make this one even better.

BENOIT CUT CLEAR.

Traveling Men Wonder at the Fine Condition of This Division.

Traveling men who have had the tiresome experience of getting snowbound in the Benoit cut in years when the snow fall was comparatively light are wondering how the Great Northern has managed to keep this bad spot clear this year of heavy snow. It is only by keeping a large crew of men constantly at work shoveling and building great high snow fences that the cut has been kept clear. The snow on one side of the track is so high now that the telegraph wires can easily be reached by the shovelers.

It's a pleasure to tell our readers about a Cough Cure like Dr. Shoop's. For years Dr. Shoop has fought against the use of opium, Chloroform, or other unsafe ingredients commonly found in cough remedies. Dr. Shoop, it seems, has welcomed the Pure Food and Drug Law recently enacted, for he has worked along similar lines for many years. For nearly 20 years Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure containers have had a warning printed on them against Opium and other narcotic poisons. He has thus made it possible for mothers to to protect their children by simply insisting on having Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. Sold by all dealers.

FIRE LOSS

Reichel Building Visited by Disastrous Night Fire—Complete Loss to Fortier's General Store—Department's Good Work Confines Flames.

Fire Wednesday night damaged the Reichel building on Main street and completely destroyed the stock of J. R. & R. Fortier, general merchaandise, and damaged the photograph gallery of W. A. Reichel.

The alarm was turned in about 9 o'clock and the department responded quickly. Hose was run to the scene and water put on the fire with the least possible delay, For a time it looked as if the entire block was doomed, but the efficient work of the department, aided by citizens, confined the flames to the ground floor of the building.

H. W. Anderson, jeweler, whose place of business is next door to the burned building, removed the most valuable of his stock to Schreiter's drug store, while the postoffice stock and records were taken to the First State bank for safety. The fire did not damage either Mr. Anderson's store or the postoffice.

The entire Fortier stock was burned out, the loss being close to $3,000, partially covered by insurance. The photograph gallery of W. A. Reichel was damaged by smoke and water and is covered by insurance. The damage to the building will amount to $500, covered by insurance.

While the origin of the fire is unknown, it is supposed to have originated by the explosion of an air-tight stove in the Fortier store. The building is owned by W. A. Reichel and is a two-story frame structure, erected about 7 years ago. Most of the losses were carried in companies represented by A. P. Toupin and P. E. Pirath.

This is the first serious fire in the town this winter, and much praise is due the department for its work in confining the flames and their prompt response to the alarm. The entire work of the department is commendable.

Clippings From the Courier of the Week of Feb. 2, 1899.

Thursday, Feb. 2nd, being the 25th anniversary of the marriage of Dr. and Mrs. I. Lemieux, invitations were extended to twenty-five couples of intimate friends to join them in the celebration of the happy event of their silver wedding. Each lady present was presented by the bride and groom with a sterling silver heart shaped key ring as a souvenir. Several pieces of silverware were tendered to the happy couple in token of the high esteem in which Mayor Lemieux and his wife are held.

Don't forget the Band concert Monday evening.

This morning the thermometers about town registered 58 degrees below zero.

Jacob Lutzer arrived Friday with a carload of furniture for the Grand View Hotel.

The Misses LaFreniere returned from Thief River Falls Monday, where they have been visiting their sister, Mrs. Peter Morrissette, for the past two weeks.

E. T. West and J. B. Armstrong started for Lost River Tuesday morning. We do not envy them their ride of sixty miles with the thermometer standing 50 degrees below the sidewalk.

The fixtures for J. M. Bray's new sample room arrived last week and are being put in place. They are of the latest pattern and are made of oak throughout. The opening of the new place will occur Saturday.

F. E. Hunt and Jos. Helm were outgoing passengers on Monday's G. N. train bound for Minneapolis to be present at the Retail Hardware Dealers' Association of Minnesota to be held there Feb. 8 and 9.

TO REGULATE ELEVATORS.

A bill to regulate grain elevators and dealers at stations was introduced in the house this week by M. S Carl, of Clara City. It prohibits elevator and warehouse men from buying grain by any other measure than the standard bushel, using the standard weight for determining the number of bushels. LAST IN SERIES OF CONCERTS

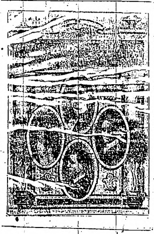
Study Club Series Will Be Concluded Monday, Feb. 11, at the Metropolitan Opera House.

The final entertainment given under the auspices of the Study club will take place at the Metropolitan Opera house next Monday, when the Colonial Saxophone Quartet will be the attraction.



It is to be regretted that there are no more of these concerts for the near future and the Study club is to be commended on its enterprise in securing these entertainments, as the winter would have been dull, indeed, had not this series been secured.

The coming number promises to be one of the best, and will, no doubt be as thoroughly enjoyed as the preceding ones.

Mexico's Soda Lakes.

Near the Gulf of California, in Mexico, are to be found some of the most remarkable lakes in the world. These are the carbonate of soda lakes of the Bay of Adair. Under the blazing desert sun, these vast expanses have the appearance of snow and ice; but the glistening masses are in reality pure carbonate of soda crystals. Another remarkable fact is that golden grain belt beer is not only the purest of all beverages but also the most beneficial to body and mind. To the daily user it brings health, strength and happiness. Order of your nearest dealer or be supplied by Alex Thompson, Crookston.

SEED GRAIN LOANS.

Senator A. L. Hanson, of Ada, will introduce a bill next week appropriating $75,000 to be given out in seed grain loans. It is designed for the benefit of farmers over the state whose lands were overflowed during last year's wet season, and who have no money to buy seed grain with this spring.

The counties are made responsible to the state for the collection of the loans. Applications for loans are to be made to the county boards, which will request from the state money enough to care for all the applications in the county.

HAD GOOD TIME.

Last Saturday afternoon from 3 to 5, the K. P. hall was the scene of a very enjoyable card party given to the older folks by Misses Hanson, Wilson, Lamb, Trudo.

In the evening the young folks were given a dance from nine to twelve by the same young ladies. The hall was prettily decorated and the music was excellent and everything was combined for a very enjoyable time. PAIN
Pain in the head—pain anywhere, has its cause. Pain is congestion, pain is blood pressure—nothing else usually. At least, so says Dr. Shoop, and to prove it he has created a little pink tablet. That tablet—called Dr. Shoop's Headache Tablet—coaxes blood pressure away from pain centers. Its effect is charming, pleasingly delightful. Gently, though safely, it surely equalizes the blood circulation.
If you have a headache, it's blood pressure.
If it's painful periods with women, same cause.
If you are sleepless, restless, nervous, it's blood congestion—blood pressure. That surely is a certainty, for Dr. Shoop's Headache Tablets stop it in 20 minutes, and the tablets simply distribute the unnatural blood pressure.
Bruise your finger, and doesn't it get red, and swell, and pain you? Of course it does. It's congestion, blood pressure. You'll find it where pain is—always. It's simply Common Sense.
We sell at 25 cents, and cheerfully recommend

FIERCE ATTACK ON OIL OCTOPUS

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION REPORTS RESULT OF INQUIRY.

MOST TERRIFIC ARRAIGNMENT

EVERY CONCEIVABLE CORPORATE CRIME IS CHARGED AGAINST TRUST.

Washington, Jan. 30.—The most terrific arraignment of the Standard Oil company yet made by either private or public investigator was that filed with congress yesterday by the interstate commerce commission.

Every conceivable corporate crime, from discrimination and false pretenses to bribery, corruption of the press and debauchery of public officials, is contained in the catalogue of charges

Describes Methods.

With a wealth of detail it describes the various methods employed by the Rockefeller combine to crush competition.

Some of these methods are outlined by the commission as follows:

"The Standard has sold different grades of oil at different prices from the same barrel.

"It has paid employes of independent oil companies for information as to the business of those competitors, and has paid employes of industrial companies to secure the adoption of its oil in preference to that of its competitors.

Oil Is Traced.

"It has followed every barrel of independent oil to its destination. Its agents are instructed to secure customers at any sacrifice.

"It has tampered with the oil inspectors in different states.

"The Standard has repeatedly, after becoming the owner of a competing company, continued to operate it under the old name, carrying the idea to the public that the company was still independent and competing with the Standard.

Operates "Fake" Concerns.

"The operation of such fake independent concerns has been one of its most effective means of destroying competition.

"The Standard has habitually reduced the price against its competitors in a particular locality while maintaining its prices at other places. When competition was destroyed, it restored or advanced former prices.

"It is the opinion of the commission that existing law is inadequate to cope with the evils complained of.

U. S. Must Take Action.

"It may become necessary," says the report, "for the uprooting of established wrongs and the prevention of others, that the government shall fix in the first instance the rates and regulations for the transportation of oil.

"It will probably be found necessary to disassociate, in the case of oil, as in that of other commodities, the function of transportation from that of production and transportation."

The investigation by the commission failed to disclose any instance where a railway company has been interested directly in oil lands or in petroleum production.

Saarbrueck, Prussia, Jan. 30. — A fire-damp explosion occurred yesterday morning in the Reden coal mine at St. Johann-on-Saar, opposite Saarbrueck, and caused the loss of from 150 to 200 lives. The Reden mine is owned by the Prussian governemnt.

Seventy-seven bodies have been brought to the surface and fifty-six corpses are known to be still underground. Only fifty live men, up to the present time, have been brought out, and of these the doctors say at least thirty-five surely will die, as they are frightfully injured through having been hurled against the walls of the galleries by the force of the explosion.

An official report says the number of dead cannot exceed 160.

Rescuers Driven Out.

The work of rescue has been greatly hampered by the poisonous gases resulting from the explosion and by a fierce fire that broke out immediately afterwards. During the afternoon the efforts at rescue had to be suspended for these reasons, and the rescue workers had to be ordered out of the mine.

After all the rescuers had reached daylight, according to one version, a second terrific detonation was heard underground. But according to another report many of the rescuers were still below when the second explosion occurred, and it is estimated that the casualty list from the two explosions reaches a total of 300 men.

It is regarded as certain that the lowest levels of the mine are completely wrecked.

About twenty firemen, including the three missing men, were on the roof of the Heywood building, adjoining the Seneca, fighting against a spread of the flames, when two thick brick walls of the Seneca building collapsed. Tons of debris from the crumbling walls crashed down upon the roof of the lower Heywood building going through the roof and carrying floor after floor into the basement. Not one of the twenty men escaped without some injury. It was said last night that none of the injured will die.

Soldier's Funeral Held Over Body of Late United States Senator.

There were delegations present from congress and the state legislature, with the State of Michigan and the city of Detroit fully represented.

Upon the flag which covered the coffin, as it was borne from his late home to the hearse, was laid the little old worn Bible that Gen. Alger had carried through the Civil war. At the mausoleum, senators, clergy and friends stepped aside to accord to the deceased soldier's comrades of the Civil war the honor of saying the last words of respect and affection in the committal ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic.

The funeral services were held at 2 o'clock at the dead senator's home.

At the time of the explosion there were about 200 men in the shaft. Organized effort is being made to get to the men in the mine and volunteers are plentiful.

Pathetic Scenes Around Mine.

The scene about the mine is a pathetic one, men, women and children crying and imploring those on the ground to go to the rescue of the entombed men.

The Stewart mine is a shaft 568 feet deep. The development is in the Sewall mine, which ranges in thickness from four to five feet. FIRE CAUSES $1,000,000 LOSS.

Section of the Big Baldwin Locomotive Works Destroyed by Fire.

Philadelphia, Jan. 31.—Fire which started with an explosion in the paint shop, destroyed one entire section of the big Baldwin Locomotive works last night, entailing a loss of $1,000,000.

About 1,000 men were employed in the burned building, which was five stories high.

The fire was discovered in the east end of the building a few minutes before 6 o'clock when the workmen were preparing to leave and though the flames spread quickly all got out safely. Shortly after the fire started the upper portion of the wall fell into the street, and one fireman and three workmen were caught by the falling brick, but fortunately only received slight injuries.

Thaw came yesterday when Justice Fitzgerald, on the motion of District Attorney Jerome and with the consent of the attorneys for the man accused of the murder of Stanford White, announced that two of the jurors selected in the early days of the proceedings would be excused from further service.

"By agreement," said District Attorney Jerome, "the reasons for this action will not be made public, but they are of a business nature."

NEWS OF THE Northwest.

BLIZZARD AGAIN TIES UP ROADS

SNOW STORM SWEEPS NORTH DAKOTA PRAIRIES, BLOCKING TRAFFIC.

GALES PILE UP HIGH DRIFTS

St. Paul, Jan. 30.—The railroads of the Northwest were again hampered yesterday in their efforts to move commerce by a blizzard which swept across the North Dakota prairies. It was more or less stormy throughout the greater part of the state, although the regions traversed by the Great Northern and the Soo were particularly affected. The Northern Pacific, being located in the southern part of the state, was let down easier, but the storm was bad enough to make trouble on its lines.

The wind began in North Dakota about 6 o'clock Sunday, blowing a stiff gale during the night. It drove the dry snow before it like chaff, until the whole conutry was enveloped in a whirling cloud of frozen particles.

Cuts Again Filled.

Some snow fell during the gale, but there was enough loose snow on the ground to supply the wind with enough material to play with. The white cyclone got furious toward morning, and the trains with great difficulty were able to make any progress through the snowdrifts which the wind piled up in the cuts and across the tracks.

The rotaries were kept going, but the wind drove the snow back again on the tracks until in some places the marks of the plows were obliterated in a few seconds. The wind decreased during yesterday, so that the plows had a chance to keep the lines clear for the passage of trains.

Harvesting of Ice Stopped Because of Car Shortage.

La Crosse, Wis., Jan. 30.—The car shortage is causing a famine in ice which promises to have a serious effect over a large section of country next summer. On the Mississippi river between La Crosse and Lake Pepin, millions of tons of ice are harvested each winter to supply half a dozen Northwestern and Middle states. This year the dealers are unable to get cars, and as there are not sufficient storage facilities on the ground, the harvesting of ice for shipment has stopped.

CLEAR TRACKS IN NORTH DAKOTA

RAILROADS HAVE MADE MUCH PROGRESS IN THE STRICKEN STATE.

NEW ROCKFORD IS DESPERATE

St. Paul, Jan. 31.—Weather conditions in the State of North Dakota were considerably improved yesterday, allowing unimpeded traffic on most of the railroad lines. The heavy wind which threatened for a time to completely block up all traffic, has entirely abated, and yesterday morning it as hardly noticeable.

Light snow has been falling for the last twenty-four hours, but it has not affected the lines to any extent.

In Montana, however, a heavy snow fell yesterday, which is of such a damp nature that it has caused considerable delays to the service.

Main Lines Are Clear.

In North Dakota it was much warmer yesterday, and the employes who are being sent against the drifts had no difficulty on account of the cold. The mai nlines have now been cleared on the Northern Pacific and Great Northern roads.

The branch line service is still very bad. It has been almost impossible to get any communication with the remote towns except in the expeditions which are still being made for the purpose of carrying supplies and fuel. No suffering is reported anywhere.

The Soo line is still out of business. The new rotary which the line purchased by bidding against the Great Western road of England passed through St. Paul en route for the West.

The commission repeated the dispatch to President Elliott of the Northern Pacific railway and asked him if something could not be done.

In reply Mr. Elliott said that his road was doing all it could to relieve the situation, and hoped to get a train through by Thursday. He said it was a question whether man or the elements would prevail.

This action was taken by a vote of 53 to 21, and followed a discussion of nearly three hours.

President Roosevelt gave his views in advocacy of ship subsidy in a special message, which was read in both houses.

Yesterday was a day of oratory in the house, the pension appropriation bill affording an opportunity to a number of representatives to make speeches, not only in behalf of the bill itself but on the tariff and on the San Francisco school incident.

Washington, Jan. 25. — The house yesterday voted to abolish all the pension agencies throughout the country, eighteen in number, and centralize the payment of pensions in the city of Washington. This action was taken on the pension appropriation after spirited opposition on the part of those having pension agencies in their states.

The pension appropriation bill, carrying $138,000,000 in round numbers, was passed

A message from the president was read relative to insurance, and at 2:30, out of respect to the memory of the late Senator Alger of Michigan, the house adjourned.

The senate adjourned without doing any business on the announcement of the death of Senator Alger.

Washington, Jan. 27.—Resolutions to check naval officers from "lighting a fire under senators and members to compel the enactment of the naval personnel bill at this session" were presented in the senate yesterday by Mr. Hale, and after causing a snappy debate of short duration went over for future consideration.

The house yesterday passed a number of bills of a local nature, including 380 private pension bills.

Washington, Jan. 28. — The house spent the greater part of Saturday debating the agricultural appropriation bill, and it was still under consideration when adjournment was taken.

The question of the free distribution of garden seeds continued to hold the most prominent place with the speechmakers.

The senate was in session only for a little more than an hour, the early adjournment being taken to permit attendance on the funeral of the late Senator Alger. A few bills of minor importance were passed.

Washington, Jan. 29.—Senator Beveridge occupied the attention of the senate throughout the day with a continuation of his argument in behalf of his child labor bill. He will conclude to-day.

Both houses adopted a joint resolution continuing the joint postal commission until its affairs can be wound up.

Twenty bills relating to the District of Columbia were passed yesterday in the house, that being "district day" under house rules.

Washington, Jan. 30.—The senate begin its session with a lecture from Senator Hale, who contended that too much talking and not enough work was being done. He had particular reference to his inability to secure the passage of the diplomatic and consular and fortifications appropriation bills, which were on the calendar.

Before the session ended these two measures had been disposed of.

Senator Beveridge concluded his speech in advocacy of his child labor bill, which has occupied three days.

The agricultural appropriation bill occupied the house most of the day and, as usual, when the amendment striking out the free distribution of seeds was reached, the members from from the farming districts outvoted those from the cities, reversed a ruling of the chair by a vote of 136 to 85, and restored the paragraph.

WITH THE LAWMAKERS

Work Accomplished by the State Legislators.

St. Paul, Jan. 25.—Gov. Johnson yesterday replied to the resolution of the house asking for his views on local option. The governor points out that in his message he recommended the adoption of the advisory initiative and referendum, so that the legislature could keep in touch from time to time with public sentiment and would not be required to consult the governor each day, week or month. He says: "County option in the regulation of the liquor traffic is not as yet a political question in this state. As it is a moral question, the members can, I am sure, be intrusted to, and will truly represent their several constituencies on this very important question, and will meet any rseponsibility."

The governor points out that while the senate has a bill pending it would be exceedingly improper for him to express his personal views on the subject.

A bill was introduced to prohibit the further issuance of state mineral leases.

The initiative and referendum is proposed under a constitutional amendment in a bill presented in the house.

Other bills of importance were: Prohibiting the sale and use of giant firecrackers; requiring evidence of right to vote; providing sleeping car tax; pensions for soldiers in the Indian massacre of 1862.

In the Senate.

Life insurance matters came up in the senate yesterday, bills being introduced relating to various phases of the business, including regulation of the rights and duties of insurance agents, establishing standard forms of policies and prescribing the items to be included in the annual reports of the companies.

Other bills were: Limiting saloons to one for each 500 of the population; requiring saloons to close of Christmas and Good Friday; inheritance tax law; requiring railroad and warehouse commission to make classification and schedules based on distance freight is transported; providing for sale of grain by bushel, and abolishing all combinations to control prices.

St. Paul. Jan. 26.—Insurance was a popular theme in the senate yesterday. Nine bills were introduced, most of them along the lines laid down by the committee of insurance commissioners for uniform insurance legislation, many of them being those recommended by that body. They were as follows: Regulating salaries of officers and agents; regulating disbursements; defining status of persons soliciting life insurance; prohibiting the issuance of non-participating policies by certain companies; prohibiting discrimination; regulating retirement of capital stock; prohibiting misrepresentation; regulating election of directors of mutual companies; regulating investment funds and real estate holdings.

Other bills introduced were: Providing for 2-cent passenger rate in state; relating to compulsory education; providing for local option elections; appropriating $10,000 for silver service for battleship Minnesota.

Two bills were passed legalizing certain bonds issued by the city of Fairmont.

In the House.

The feature of the house session was the passage of the bill taking all state mineral leases off the market, or, in other words, prohibiting their further issuance.

A bill was introduced appropriating $50,000 for contingent expenses in the attorney general's department. It is to be used for expenses incurred in the big railroad suits in which the state is interested.

A distance tariff for railroads is proposed in a bill introduced yesterday.

Other important bills were: Providing for county option; amending code relating to carnal knowledge of children and abduction; providing for licensing peddlers and hawkers; amending the inheritance tax law; licensing of civil engineers and surveyors.

The house also passed the two bills legalizing certain bonds issued by the cit yof Fairmont.

Both houses adjourned until Tuesday.

St. Paul, Minn., Jan. 30.—A resolution calling for the appointment of a committee of five to investigate the railways in respect to the volume of business, cost of doing business and the like, was passed in the senate yesterday. This action followed the reading of a communication from the railroad and warehouse commission in answer to a resolution calling for such information. The resolution was adopted after a spirited debate.

Senator Noonan offered a resolution intended to expedite consideration of his 2-cent fare bill, but it went over under notice of debate.

A number of petitions favoring county option were received.

Bills introduced were: Providing where property along the right of way is fenced on three sides by woven wire, railway company shall erect like fence on the other side; providing for drainage of lands in any county; empowering state to appeal to supreme court in criminal prosecutions in certain cases; regulating issuance of leases and permits of state mineral lands; providing punishment for desecration of of cemeteries; providing for fruit breeding farm at the University of Minnesota.

In the House.

A new inheritance tax bill was introduced in the house. It taxes all bequests over $10,000.

The railroad and warehouse commission is given supervision over all issues of stocks by domestic railroad companies in a bill presented in the house. The commission is given authority to examine books and make any needed investigation.

A third fish hatchery, to be located at Detroit lake, is provided for in another bill.

A bill to prohibit the killing of prairie chickens during the years 1907 and 1908 was introduced.

Other bills introduced: Authorizing renewal licenses for life insurance companies; providing for appeal from orders of the railroad and warehouse commission; giving soldiers of the Spanish-American war free tuition at the state university; prohibiting fraternities in the public schools; amending state primary law; providing for suppression of contagious diseases in cows; authorizing appointment of state drainage commission; making uniform the law of warehouse receipts.

CAN RECLAIM SWAMP LANDS.

The state drainage commission, consisting of Gov. Johnson, the secretary of state and the state auditor, has submitted its report to the legislature. The report was prepared by George A. Ralph, chief engineer of the commission, and is voluminous, containing topographical data and maps, together with a complete account of the survey which was begun in May, 1905, and ended in December, 1906.

The survey was made under an act passed by the last legislature, and was for the purpose of ascertaining the area of swamp and marsh lands held by the state, and also the area of the same kind of land held by private ownership which will be affected by state drainage; to determine the feasibility of draining these lands, the cost of reclaiming and their value when reclaimed; to plan a comprehensive system of drainage which will effectually drain and reclaim all lands owned by the state.

The area embraced in this survey comprises parts of Kittson, Roseau, Marshall, Beltrami, Clearwater, Hubbard, Wadena, Cass, Crow Wing, Itasca, Aitkin and St. Louis counties. The cost of the survey was $15,000.

The commission says:

"We are convinced that the time has arrived when it is imperatively neccessary for the state to pursue a vigorous policy in dealing with this question. We respectfully recommend that the reclamation of the state swamp lands be continued on a more extensive scale and that a liberal annual appropriation be made for carrying on this work.

"In this connection we would suggest that a law be enacted by the legislature whereby all lands benefited by the construction of any proposed state ditch may be required to pay their full share of the cost of the improvement."

According to the report the state owns at the present time approximately 2,500,000 acres of land, 2,428,678 acres of which is wet and unfit for cultivation in its natural state. Approximately 90 per cent of this wet land is located in Roseau, Cass, Itasca, St. Louis, Aitink, Lake and Cook counties. At all places on these wet lands reached by the survey the surface slope was found sufficient to insure cheap and effective drainage. The soil is generally of a fertile nature and when drained will be very productive.

The area covered by the survey is generally well provided with natural waterways, such as coulees, creeks, rivers which have swift currents and channels of sufficient capacity in most instances to carry off all additional water which may be discharged from the artificial channels required to drain the swamp areas lying in their respective watersheds.

According to the large scheme of drainage that the commission has in mind, 3,187 miles of ditches will be required, necessitating an excavation of 52,283,612 cubic yards. The estimated cost of the excavation is $5,980,943.12 and the contingent expenses $1,055,093. Itasca county will require 800 miles of ditches, St. Louis county 670 miles, Cass 250 miles and Roseau 360 miles. The cost of excavation per acre varies from $1.20 in Marshall county to $2.60 in Wadena county. The cost of excavation in St. Louis county would be $1.27 per acre. It is estimated that the entire cost of the drainage would be about $7,000,000, of which the state would have to pay $3,044,911.42 and the private lands the rest. It is also estimated that all of the land in this region would increase in value, when drained, from $6 to $17 per acre.

PROBABLE OUTCOME.

Reapportionment talk is in the air since the selection of the house committee which was chosen by the district delegations. There is a strong hostile sentiment in the senate toward a reapportionment that will cut the senators out of two years' service, but it seems to be taken for granted that some kind of a reapportionment scheme will be worked through the house, and put up to the senators for action.

All the Northern Minnesota members want reapportionment, and they are beginning to figure the thing out: Several members are already busy with copies of the last census report, paper and pencils.

There is already a strong talk of reducing the membership in both houses. Up to this time every reapportionment has been an increase leaving the southern counties about the same old membership, and increasing the representation from the north. A limit has been reached, and no one proposes any further increase. Both houses are large enough, and it is a question whether they are not too large. The average state senate is not over fifty. Both chambers are filled now with members' desks, but that is the smallest consideration. Every additional member is a great added expense to the state, directly and indirectly.

SOUTH LOSES ANYWAY.

So there are just two courses left open for a reapportionment bill, the the readjustment of districts on the basis of the present membership. In either case the southern districts would suffer, and naturally they are opposed to reapportionment, though some of the southern members are ready to vote for it as a measure of justice. But if there is a reduction in membership, the northern districts will not gain to any extent, and will merely cut off membership from the south. The friends of reapportionment are beginning to think there is a better chance for that sort of a bill than for one that takes members from the south and gives them to the north. The southern part of the state will be less inclined to fight the change if the north does not gain membership.

A scheme creating about fifty senatorial districts is likely to be worked out, with provision for a hundred house members. This would cut off thirteen senators and nineteen representatives, by consolidating districts in the southern part of the state.

ANY REASON?

There seems to be an epidemic in the schools at Thief River Falls. Six of the teachers engaged by the school board last fall have since resigned to get married. It is said that one teacher left in the middle of the week, and didn't even think to leave word with the board. The board doesn't know how to quarantine against the matrimonial infection, and it doesn't even know if the severest stage has passed.—Crookston Times.

SHORT ON SMALL BILLS.

Hubbard County Clipper: Secretary of the Treasury Shaw says he notices a scarcity of small bills. Same here. Plenty of large bills, of course, but can't get change. Very provoking.

There is a prospect now that Thief River Falls will either abandon the County seat removal proposition, or elect a new lot of managers, as it is very evident that the Red Lake Falls boys are too smooth for the managers of the Thief River Falls end of the deal. We only judge by the events of the past few months—for if we employed a man to work in our office as a printer and he should blunder around until he "pied" one of our forms, we should conclude he did not understand his business, and fire him at once.—The Sunbeam.

The Crookston Land office is in receipt of a letter from M. R. Hopper, at Ponoka, Alberta, Canada, asking about public lands in Minnesota, saying that "there are ten or twelve families of us here who would like to go back and take homestead lands in Minnesota," and signs himself as "one who is tired of Canada."

GOOD TIMBER SOLD CHEAP.

To Check Ravages of Black Hills Beetle, Purchasers of Infested Timber Are Sought By Forest Reserve.

In the effort to check the pine bark beetle, which has been severely attacking the forest in parts of the Black Hills Forest Reserve, South Dakota, the Government is resorting to drastic measures. For the first time under the Forest Service, actual cutting, skidding and burning of debris have been carried on by Government employes. Insect-infested timber, both standing and already felled under Service direction, is offered for sale. Large quantities of it can be secured at a fraction of the price charged for green wood.

Yet this wood is just as good for lumber and railroad ties as green wood and would ordinarily bring an equal price. Small sales have not been numerous enough to remove the infested timber; hence it is necessary to offer special inducements if the timber is to be saved. Timber not now accessible can be reached under extensive operations which would warrant the building of the necessary railroads.

This action followed up a study of the insect situation on the reserve by Dr. A. D. Hopkins, in charge of forest insect investigations in the Bureau of Entomology, who recommended that the Service push the cutting and disposal of infested timber as the only mean of preventing the spread of the beetles through wider and wider areas. To broaden the market for the timber a clause in the agricultural appropriation bill, last winter, permitting the exportation of timber for two years beyond the borders of South Dakota. But even this has not brought enough or large enough applications to take the timber which should be disposed of. Hitherto the government has waited for a bidder before advertising for competitors. This precedure, through delay, threatens too serious a loss in the waste of trees now infested and in the spread of the beetles to fresh stands. The Forest Service will now take the initiative and advertise for bidders, in order to draw attention to this timber which is a menace to the future supply on the reserve.

By securing prompt purchasers for the infested logs and standing trees, and destroying the insect broods by firing the bark and slash, it is hoped that the surrounding forests will soon be saved from further insect attack.

The timber attacked by the bark beetle has not lost its commercial value. There is no reason why the desired sales should not more than reimburse the Government, besides utilizing a large amount of pine which would otherwise be wasted.

TOMMY'S COMPLAINT.

(Puck.)

Father's got the fresh air craze, and mother's got it, too.
And I don't know if I can stand this bloomin' winter through.
We haven't a furnace fire, 'cause father says as where
A fire is unhealthy, so we warm with his hot air.
He gets up early ev'ry morn' an'
thaws out both the cats,
And then goes up to our spare room
and does some acrobats;
The winders are left up all night,
an' in the mornin', gosh!
I have to crack the ice up in the pitcher when I wash.
An' mother, too, she's just as bad,
she walks from two till four.
And them comes back and pulls at somethin' hangin' on the door.
And then she takes a big, long breath—it's one of her best tricks—
And doesn't breath until she has counted up ter ninety-six.
We live on malted shavin's and shredded door mats, too.
An' I can't use my appetite—it's just as good as new,
An' so I'm goin' to grandma's house,
where I can sleep and stuff
Till mother gets her lungs filled up an' pa gets air enuff.

Northern Minnesota is not the only place on the map that is "enjoying" extreme cold weather. New York and Philadelphia and other eastern cities report cold, snow, delayed trains and fuel shortages the same as though they were used to doing it.

The local Great Northern passenger broke its streak of regularity last Saturday when no train came. The weather was so severe that no passage was attempted until Sunday when a big snow plow was sent through as far as St. Hilaire. The mail service was suspended till Monday when the passenger resumed its regular run.

Fred Krueger had a bad fall last Monday, breaking two ribs on the right side. Mr. Krueger is confined to his bed and is in a serious condition, and owing to his advanced age it will be some time before he will be about again. The accident occurred while Mr. Krueger was leaving the Grand View hotel, where he slipped on an icy spot in the kitchen doorway. He is being attended by Dr. Lemieux.

Dairy meeting at St. Hilaire on Friday, Feb. 22nd, under the auspices of the farmer's club. The speakers are all practiced men and the matter under consideration will be along practical lines. The meeting will open at 10 a. m. and free dinner tickets will be given out at the opening of the meeting. A great deal of interest is manifested in the meeting already and it will be the largest and most succesful dairy meeting ever held in Red Lake county, celebrating the fifth anniversary of the St. Hilaire creamery.

MIX THIS AT HOME.

The following simple home-made mixture is said to readily relieve and overcome any form of Rheumatism by forcing the kidneys to filter from the blood and system all the uric acid and poisonous waste matter, relieving at once such symptoms as backache, weak kidneys and bladder and blood diseases.

Try it, as it doesn't cost much to make, and is said to be absolutely harmless to the stomach.

Get the following harmless ingredients from any good pharmacy: Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Mix by shaking well in a bottle, and take a teaspoonful after each meal and again at bedtime.

This mixture is said to give prompt relief, and there are very few cases of Rheumatism and Kidney troubles it will fail to cure permanently.

These are all harmless, every-day drugs, and your druggist should keep them in the prescription department; if not, have him order them from the wholesale drug houses for you, rather than fail to use this, if you are afflicted.

MAYOR OF SUNBURY

Says Pe-ru-na Is a Good Medicine.

Hon. C. C. Brooks, Mayor of Sunbury, Ohio, also Attorney for Farmers' Bank and Sunbury Building and Loan Co., writes:

"I have the utmost confidence in the virtue of Peruna. It is a great medicine. I have used it and I have known many of my friends who have obtained beneficial results from its use. I cannot praise Peruna too highly."

HON. C. C. BROOKS.

THERE are a host of petty ailments which are the direct result of the weather.

This is more true of the excessive heat of summer and the intense cold of winter, but is partly true of all seasons of the year.

Whether it be a cold or a cough, catarrh of the head or bowl complaint, whether the liver be affected or the kidneys, the cause is very liable to be the same.

The weather slightly deranges the mucous membranes of the organs and the result is some functional disease.

Peruna has become a standby in thousands of homes for minor ailments of this sort.

WAY OF THE MOONSHINER.

His Methods About the Same Everywhere, According to an Expert.

The ways of the moonshiner are pretty much the same everywhere. A suitable location consists of a secluded spot with water in abundance. It is important, should he ever be called upon to defend a case in court, for the question of ownership of the land upon which the still is located to be involved in doubt, hence the moonshiner gets as near the line of his own land or the land he controls as possible.

The stills are primitive affairs and are often made complete in the neighborhood in which they are operated. With two or three square yards of sheet copper the stillmaker requires but a few hours to make the "biler." Homemade hogsheads are usually used as fermenters and the only thing the illicit distiller has to send "off yander arter" is the worm. Being difficult to secure, the moonshiner prizes his "worm" highly, and that part of the distillery is usually taken away when the operator leaves.

In South Georgia and Alabama and in Florida, where cane "skimmins" are distilled into a kind of rum, "pot stills" are common. A "pot still" consists of an ordinary iron wash pot with a wooden drum made to fit over the mouth of it. The product of these stills is called by the natives "pottins." Such an innocent, commonplace appliance as an iron tank used with the kitchen range to heat water for the bath tub often becomes an important part of a moonshine still. It is laid upon the ground filled with water, heat is applied and the steam thus generated is conveyed by pipes to the still containing low wines or beer.

Wanted a Cheap Coat.

A well-known court furrier recently received an order from a country tailor for a £500 coat. Inquiry elicited the statement that it was desired to save the wear of one which originally cost 5,000 guineas.—Men's Wear.

Knew What Was Coming.

The judge of the supreme court polished his glasses slowly and with dignity becoming a member of so august a tribunal.

"Judge not," he said, "judge not," and paused and sighed.

"Lest ye be roasted in the magazines," he added.

There isn't much hope for those who look upon the church collection as a hold-up game.

It's no use calling people to happiness in a sepulchural tone.

THE Brangwyn Mystery

CHAPTER XXX.

Messrs. Holt and Ribot, hunting once more in couple, took up the trail of the fugitive here and there, lost it here and there, found it again; and, having once arrived at the fact that one man was wandering about France with one aspect and many names, addresses, and accents, they had little difficulty in arriving at least at the conclusion that for one reason or other that person desired to evade pursuit Apart from that one device Alexis had adopted no precaution, and when it was detected the device itself served to expose his track. They came upon him, but they came a day too late. He had passed out of human jurisdiction, and there was nothing left but to observe the last formalities of the law, to take possession of the valuables the dead man had left behind him, and to go once more in pursuit of their separate business and desires. The news was known in England long before the trial of Aloysius.

The freed man, relieved at last of the incubus which had weighed so long upon him, could scarcely suffer further. The disgrace he had endeavored to avert had fallen, but no man or woman coupled him with it, and he went back to his country house and dwelt there in a slowly growing peace. Little by little the dead past buried its dead, the minutes falling like grains of sand, until the sorrows, which had been were obliterated. At times a gust of memory blew the ghastly thing bare again, but the hand of time gently rearranged the burial mound, and the gusts grew rarer and more rare.

When, in the afternoon of that never-to-be-forgotten day on which Aloysius was liberated, Belle had been urgently summoned by her husband to take charge of Lilian and to convey her home, the two women wept in each other's arms, and the younger said enough to convince her friend that she looked on the man whose addresses she had declined with a passion of regret that she had lent him an extra load to carry, in addition to the burden of sorrow he had borne. The thought of the man to whom she had promised to ally herself was dreadful to her. The murderous hand had fouled hers; the treacherous, lying lips had touched her own. There was a deep pollution in these memories. And it was for him—for him!—that she had declined the man who now seemed to her godlike in his self-abnegation and in the strength in which he had endured.

Lilian had retired to rest, worn out with weeping, and lay still holding Belle's hand in her own long after she had fallen into the slumber of exhaustion. She still sobbed in her sleep like a child that has been frightened or chidden undeservedly, and the faithful little Irish lady sat there hour after hour, whilst the autumn darkness gathered and the chill of the autumn night came up with the mist that floated from the river.

At last she heard the whistle of the approaching train, and, gently detaching her hand, stole silently downstairs to await her husband, to bring the drowsy fire to a cheerful brightness, to warm Billery's slippers, and to set his favorite armchair, pipe and an ample jar of tobacco near at hand. When all was ready she stood listening for his footstep, and was at the door when he was yet a score of yards away. Billery kissed her dutifully on arrival, and when he had adjusted the fastenings of the door went along the little hall with her, with an arm about her waist. And when Billery had lit the midnight pipe and had poured out the flowing midnight bowl of cocoa, he suffered his proud wife to kneel before him to unlace his boots, and to draw them from his feet, and to substitute for them a pair of slippers toasted to a turn.

All this being done, Belle slipped behind his chair, and resting on the back of it, contemplating the bald spot on top of Billery's head, she began to talk to him.

"Hamilton," she said, "I've heard ye declare often that every good woman is a matchmaker."

"I hope," said Billery, in return, "that you've heard me say one or two much more original things than that."

"But ye have said it," Belle retorted, "and ye believe it, don't ye?"

"I have said it," replied Billery, "and I believe it."

"Hamilton," began Belle, with more hesitation of manner than she commonly showed, "there's things a wife may say to her husband she couldn't possibly say to anybody else."

"Lots of 'em," Billery answered, lightly, blowing the fragrant cloud from before him and waving it with his hand.

"The poor darlin' gyurl that's lying asleep upstairs," said Belle, "has found her heart at last. It's broken, me dear, but it's mendable, and I'm goin' to try to help to mend it."

"Belle, dearest," said Billery, gravely, "it's too soon; you mustn't begin for months to come. You can't hasten the development of a rose by meddling with the petals of the bud."

"And do ye think, ye gander," Belle asked him, "that I'd go at a delicate thing like that as a bull charges a gate? You let me alone for that, now. 'Twould be indecent in either of them to be thinkin' of courtin' immediately on top of a tragedy like the one they're both just through with, and I know there's nothing farther from their moinds. But ye know as well as I do that he'd doy"—Belle was very emphatic and therefore rather more than usually Irish—"he'd doy to save her from the merest little harm. Ye know he worships the very shoe she wears."

"No," said Billery, "as a matter of fact, my dear, I don't know. He hasn't taken me into his confidence."

"Well, if ye don't know, she knows, and I dew. And she's let the cat out of the bag to-night, Hamilton, if never she did before. She thinks the world of him."

"And well she may, by George!" said Billery. "There ain't a nobler fellow on the planet."

"That's just her way of thinkin'," cried Belle. "But there's a difference between thinking highly of a man an' bein' in love with him. Now, Lilian Lee's just as much in love with Aloysius Brangwyn as ever Aloysius Brangwyn was with Lilian Lee, and for him she's the one woman on the earth, and has been years out o' countin', though she's barely two-and-twenty. They just adore each other, and there's the long and short of it. But they're in a position of great delicacy, and they're just the people to exaggerate it. He's asked her twice already, and he'll go about thinkin' that she's wasted her heart on that unutterable villain, and can never think an' feel again like a live-blooded woman. An' he'll be makin' a nun an' a blessed angel of her in his own melancholy Don Quixote way, and she'll have to be quiet and miserable—for it's not every woman in the world that will take her courage in both hands as I did with you, my dear. And if they're not to go on always in that way, breakin' both their hearts for the want of a little understanding, they'll want a person of tact about them."

"Upon my word, little woman," said Billery, "you're breaking out in a new place with a vengeance. And you're going to be the person of tact?"

"I am, then," said Belle, in vivid affirmation. "And I'm goin' to be the person of determination in the bargain. There'll be no shilly-shally where I am, an' that ye'll live to see Mr. Billery."

"That I shall live to see," he answered, "I know I shall throughout my wretched and henpecked existence."

"I dare ye to repeat the word," she cried.

"'Henpecked' was the word I used" said Billery. "Henpecked!"

"I'll henpeck ye!" said Belle. She kept her word by kissing the bald spot. "Hamilton, 'tis wonderful to think how little a time we've been married, for ye're just as easy to wear as an old shoe already. But amn't I right in what I've been saying? And haven't I your subloime approval?"

"I've not the slightest doubt you're right, my dear. And I think you're just the identical person for the business, and I wish you well with it with all my heart. Only—one word. Haste, as the poet observes, my dear, is half-sister to delay."

"Oh, I'll take time," said Belle. "But what'll you bet that I don't have them safely married before our own first anniversary comes round?"

"You act with so much promptitude in these little matters," her husband answered, rising and shaking her in a waggish way, "that I shall be prepared for anything."

So Mistress Billery laid herself out formally to besiege Lilian with precisely such an eager determination not to be defeated as she had displayed on an earlier occasion. She talked eternal Aloysius. It was her plan in some slight way to provoke Lilian to defend him. As, for instance, that it was absurd to go on hiding himself as he did now that all the world was waiting and eager to receive him and to make amends. Or that he had a duty to the world which he could not fulfil by moping by himself forever. That he had great talents, which he was burying in a napkin. Thus urged, Lilian many a time shot far beyond her own intent, and her heaving bosom and tender, glowing eyes were more eloquent than the words in which she sang his praise.

"Lilian," said Belle, after one of her warmest outbursts, "don't ye think we women are mighty quare creatures, even to ourselves? Now, it's as plain to me as the nose on Hamilton's face—and that's a plain man's plainest feature—that ye're as much in love with Mr. Brangwyn as ever woman was in love or could be." Lilian blushed like fire and hung her head, but she offered no disclaimer. "But that's of course, and I'd be a fool not to see it. But the curious part of it is that ye've been in love with him all along."

"Oh, Belle!" said Lilian, and she hid her burning face in both hands.

"Exactly," Belle answered, in her most matter-of-fact tone. "And it's only lately that ye've known it. It had just begun to dawn upon ye when I went down to see ye, and drew ye out of that fit of the mopes ye'd fallen into. And it's been growing clearer an' clearer to ye day be day, me poor, self-deludin' darlin' gyurl, and now ye're breaking your poor heart to think how cruel ye were to doubt yourself, an' to hold him aloof from his own proper shelter in your love. Ah! cry away, then. I'll change them bitter drops to sweetness before I've done wid ye; so I will. He's longin' for you. Longin'! Haven't I seen the hunger in the eyes of him? He's only waiting for a word."

"Oh, Belle!" cried Lilian, raising her flushed and tear-stained face for an instant, and hiding it again. "How can I?"

"Ye can't," said Belle, between laughing and crying. "Ye can't, me dear, but I can!"

"No, no, no!" cried Lilian. "No. You mustn't. You dare not. I should die for shame."

"Must I not, then?" Bell retorted. "An' dare I not? 'Tis very well, Miss Lee, but I'll take the first opportunity that falls into me hands to bring me gentleman into the way of reason and right conduct."

Lilian slid to her knees at her friend's feet and seized her by the wrists.

"Belle, dear, you mustn't do anything so dreadful. Tell me you won't."

"Lilian," said Belle, "ye're a rank imposter—or impostress, for I never was sure of my grammar. Confess now that there's nothing would please you in the world so much as if I marched off to Mr. Aloysius Brangwyn and cheered the heavy heart of the poor, dear man with the news that ye'd be delighted to marry him. Ye haven't the face to deny it. And I'll do ut, Lilian; I'll do ut the first time I set eyes on him if me heart doesn't drop deep into me boots. Here's two of the noblest hearts in the world," cried Belle, appealing to the world at large, "hearts that suffered troubles untold, an' they're being held apart by a cobweb."

Lilian ran to the refuge of her own room, and Mrs. Billery took up some trifle of ornamental needlework and stitched at it diligently and steadily for one-half hour. She thought hard meanwhile, and she thought to such effect that at the end of the time specified she deliberately stowed all her work away, folding and smoothing it with great care and accuracy, fastened the clasp of her little wicker workbasket, and walked quietly upstairs. Then she set herself off to the best advantage in a set of pretty gray furs which Lilian had given her, and, adjusting her gloves with great nicety, after backward glances at the mirror and many little touches of the fingers which produced no effect on anything which was likely to be perceptible to the eye of man, she left the house and proceeded at a comfortable pace to the house of Mr. Aloysius Brangwyn. Her heart beat very rapidly, but she had made up her mind, and she was not to be turned aside from her purpose. Card case in hand, she sailed in state to the door, where a trim maid answered her knock and took her card for presentation to Mr. Brangwyn. Next she was shown to the drawing room, and was instructed that Mr. Brangwyn begged her to excuse him for a single moment.

She sat with her heart beating a sudden rataplan in her bosom. Aloysius entered, and she rose to shake hands.

"A visit from my charming enemy!" he said. "An unlooked-for pleasure!"

"Ye'll never call me your enemy again," Belle answered. "What it cost me to come here, Mr. Brangwyn, ye'll never know."

"You are agitated, Mrs. Billery," he said. "I trust you are not in trouble, or, if you are, that I can be of service."

"I'm in no trouble for meself, Mr. Brangwyn. I'm in trouble for the friend that I love dearest in the world." Aloysius knew who this was, and he paled. He said nothing, and Belle perforce went onward. "Mr. Brangwyn, I have just surprised a secret. If I were a coward I'd not be here." She saw a wonder in his eyes, and she gripped her courage hard. "Mr. Brangwyn," she said, "ye—ye love Miss Lee?"

"I love Miss Lee!" he answered, simply, though his face was a book of strange reading.

"I've told you," Belle stammered and hurried on, "that I have surprised a secret. Dear Mr. Brangwyn, don't think me unwomanly or overbold, but the secret's just this—me darlin' Lilian is breakin' her heart to think of her own folly and how she threw your love away. We're often so, we women, Mr. Brangwyn. We don't know the truth about ourselves until it is too late. She'd rather die than give a sign. You'd rather die than pain her by the renewal of what you're afraid was a distasteful suit. And I'd rather die than see me darlin' wither through her prime for want of one plain word that I can speak." And with this Belle fell to weeping.

"My dear Mrs. Billery," cried Aloysius, "I beseech you to calm yourself. Are you sure of the news you bring me?"

"As sure," cried Belle, between her sobs, "as that I'm alive." She controlled herself and went on eagerly. "We talk of you all day and every day. I knew the truth before this happy afternoon, but to-day I took the bull by the horns, though that's not the proper way to talk of Lilian"—this with a laugh that threatened disaster—"and I told her that she loved you. She fought me, but I pressed her and it all came out. I told her that she had loved you all along—yes, from the very first, and she admitted it. She never knew it until quite lately. She feared you, she feared herself. Oh, 'tis so with girls. Before a woman gives a man all—her heart, her life, her soul—the surrender looks so large. There's something so terrifying in it. But she's yours now, Aloysius Brangwyn yours now and forever."

"Does she——" he stammered, and broke down.

"I told her I'd tell ye. She fell upon her knees to hold me back, and I told her she was an imposter and she ran away. Put on your hat, Mr. Brangwyn, and escort me home."

Aloysius obeyed, and on the way the little Irish lady, walking demurely at his side, looked up and asked him:

"Ye're quite sure ye love her?"

"Yes," he answered—and she said afterward that she never hoped to see again such a transfiguring smile—"I am quite sure of that."

"Stay here a moment," said Belle, ushering him into her little dining room. He heard the swift rustling of her skirts as she raced upstairs, and even her excited cry of "Lilian!" before the door of the upper room closed behind her.

There was a pause which seemed long to his impatience, but at last he heard the rustle of skirts again, and in another instant Belle came in radiant and alone. She called him by a motion of the hand, and as he obeyed the gesture she pointed to a door.

"In there."

He entered, and she stood before him with both hands outstretched, her eyes and lips and gesture one divine appeal.

"Lilian," he asked her, "Lilian, is this true?"

"True?" she answered. "True that I love you? Oh, yes, dear Aloysius. I have loved you always."

He took her in his arms and she grew to him in a long tranced embrace. He kissed her on the forehead as if to set a seal there and looked into the happy humid eyes.

"My beloved is mine," she whispered, "and I am his." Her beautiful face all aflame with blushes and her eyes smiling through her tears, she raised her lips to his.

(The End.)

THIEF BEHIND PORTRAIT.

Substituted His Eyes for Those in the Picture and Made a Rich Haul.

A Russian official named M. Loktieff on returning home with his wife about 2 o'clock in the morning was attracted by a strange noise in the drawing room, as if a chair had been pushed. An examination by candle light revealed nothing amiss, and a search in the other rooms had the same result.

They returned to the drawing room, where a large portrait of Mme. Loktieff's grandfather, in the uniform of a Uhlan officer, was standing against the wall. The young wife glanced at the portrait and uttering a scream, rushed from the room.

"What's the matter?" asked her husband, greatly surprised.

"I just thought the portrait was looking at me with real eyes!" answered the wife, who was trembling violently.

Her husband laughed at her childish fears. Half an hour passed before Mme. Loktieff came to herself, and then remembering that she had left her purse in the drawing room with £6 in it, she took a candle and bravely entered the room in her search for it. A wild shriek followed. Her husband rushed in and found his wife lying in a dead faint on the floor. With the cook's help he carried his wife to bed. While he was nursing her he told the cook to search the room carefully, but she did not find anything suspicious.

The next morning M. Loktieff, looking more closely at the portrait, found that the eyes had been cut out and the portrait had been moved a little from the wall. Further investigation showed that many valuables were missing. The thief had bidden himself, it seems, behind the portrait and was watching the couple all the time through the eyeholes of the portrait.

Singing Records.

The singer, at the end of the practice aria, panted heavily.

"I sang 196 notes that time," he said, "without once taking breath."

"Indeed! That must be a record."

"No. The record is held by Courtice Pounds. Pounds sang 316 notes without respiration in 1898. The record previous to that was held by Farinelli, with 300 notes. Norman Salmond has sung 287 notes in this way.

"It is wonderful what lungs trained singers have. The average man could hardly sing fifty notes without breathing, whereas to the singer 200 would be nothing."

Frank.

Miss Robinson (to stranger at reception)—Do you see that plain looking girl over there? She has just got married. I'm sure I wonder what her husband married her for.

"I have no doubt he married her for her money," replied the stranger.

"Oh, I wouldn't think so badly of him as that," said Miss Robinson.

"But I ought to know," replied the stranger, "you see, I am the man who married her."

Children in Camp.

When the San Francisco Protestant asylum was burned in the big fire last April all the children were taken to the country near Petaluma and put into camp there. Meanwhile, new quarters were prepared or them in the city, to which they have just returned, all the better for their eight months of camp life.

Centuries Too Soon.

The earl of Warwick heaved a deep sigh.

"They call me the kingmaker!" he said. "I'd rather be a peacemaker, but there's no money in it!"

For, as he reflected with bitterness of soul, the Nobel Fund had not been established yet.

HEALTH AND SPIRITS

Are Restored by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in Cases of Debility and Despondency.

General debility is caused by mental or physical overwork with imperfect assimilation of nourishment, or by some acute disease from which the vital forces have been prostrated and the entire organism weakened so as not to easily rally. To restore health it is necessary that the blood should be purified and made new.

The case of Mrs. E. M. Spears, of 92 Mt. Pleasant street, Athol, Mass., is a common one and is given here in order that others may be benefited by her experience. She says: "I had been sick for a year from indigestion and general debility brought on by overwork and worry. I had tried many remedies, but found no relief. I suffered from swelling of the limbs, loss of appetite and dizzy spells, which became so severe towards night, that I sometimes fainted away. I was bilious and my hands and arms would go to sleep for an hour or two at a time. I was so sleepy all the time that I could hardly keep awake. I had frequent cramps in my limbs and severe pains at the base of my head and in my back. My blood was impoverished. I was afraid to give up and go to bed fearing that I would never get well.

"About this time Dr. Williams' Pink Pills were recommended to me by a friend in South Vernon, Vt. I felt better soon after beginning the treatment and continued until I was entirely cured. I consider Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a grand medicine for weak women."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price 50 cents per box, six boxes $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

THE CANADIAN WEST IS THE BEST WEST

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

The testimony of thousands during the past year is that the Canadian West is the best West. Year by year the agricultural returns have increased in volume and in value, and still the Canadian Government offers 160 acres FREE to every bona fide settler.

Some of the Advantages

The phenomenal increase in railway mileage—main lines and branches—has put almost every portion of the country within easy reach of churches, schools, markets, cheap fuel and every modern convenience.

The NINETY MILLION BUSHEL WHEAT CROP of this year means $60,000,000 to the farmers of Western Canada, apart from the results of other grains and cattle.

Champagne Flat in Damp Glasses.

Champagne poured into a damp glass—atmospheric moisture alone is often sufficient to cause the dampness—will, as a rule, go flat at once, while wine poured from the same bottle into a dry glass, or a glass in which there may be a little surface roughness or a few imperceptible particles of dust, will retain its effervescence.

It follows that when the "mousse" is normal in the bottle the wine should not be condemned as flat because it fails to sparkle in the glass. In nine cases out of ten it is the glass, not the bottle, that should be changed.

Since then we have always kept the soap on hand at all times. My sister was also cured of eczema of the head by using the Cuticura Remedies. Deafness Cannot Be Cured by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

A Woman's Intuition

(Tale of an Exciting Adventure on the Cumberland River.)

By Opie Read

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

On the banks of the Cumberland river, in Tennessee, there stood a log hut, the home of an old ferryman. With the old man lived his niece, a tall, strong, handsome girl.

The old man's name was Abner Scrib. He called the girl Tony. She was a bright little thing, and her mind seemed to hop about like a bird.

Tony was nearly 18, when her uncle was suddenly taken ill and died. The preacher's wife offered her a home. She shook her head.

"But what are you going to do?"

"I'm going to set people over the river," she said.

She was trim and graceful and appeared delicate, but she was strong, the strength of fine-drawn steel. Her management of the big boat for wagons and teams was a constant surprise.

Late one afternoon, while Tony was sitting on the shore reading, there came a loud cry from the opposite bank. "The canoe—bring it as quickly as possible!"

She leaped into the canoe and skimmed across.

"Quick!" said the young man standing in the edge of the water. "Take me over as fast as you can!"

"You must be going for a doctor."

"I am going to keep from needing one. Don't lose any time. They are coming."

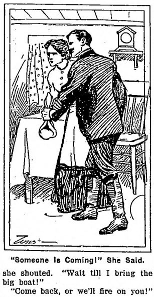
"Who?"

"The human wolves. Don't you hear them? They are after me—they put me in jail over yonder in the village for nothing. I broke out. Yonder they come."

"They can't catch us," she replied, quietly.

A troop of men dashed down to the river, and leaped off their horses, looking about for a boat. They commanded Tony to come back.

"My canoe won't hold so many!" she shouted. "Wait till I bring the big boat!"



"Someone Is Coming!" She Said.

"Come back, or we'll fire on you!" a man cried.

"You'd better turn around and go back," said the young man with a sigh.

She looked at him. "Didn't you say you were innocent of any crime?"

"Yes; but they'll shoot, and they might hit you."

She smiled. The men began to shoot. The bullets plucked up the water.

"They believe in baptism by sprinkling," she remarked.

He gazed at her, forgetful of the bullets. "You are the noblest creature I ever saw!" he declared.

"The sun on the water dazzles your eyes," she replied.

"No; a more startling brightness dazzles my soul."

"That's rather pretty. See, they have found a boat. They can catch you. The wood is thick, and you'll get turned around and around unless you know the road. Up there on the rise is my cabin. When you jump ashore I will stay to hold them back as long as possible. Go to my house. In the middle of the floor is a bear skin. Under it is a trap door leading down into a potato cellar. Get down in there. Smooth down the bear skin as well as you can when you-ve got in. Now jump out, and run."

When he had leaped ashore, she turned back to meet the men. She recognized Masford, the sheriff of the county.

"Scatter out in every direction," he said. Then, looking at Tony, he added, "Bill and I will go up to the house. He might double back on his track like a rabbit and come back to the river."

"I shall be pleased to entertain you," said Tony, with a note of cheerfulness in her voice; but she felt that she was growing pale, and she turned away to hide her face.

"Oh, yes, you are very innocent," said the shrewd sheriff, as he stepped into the cabin.

"Oh, I hope so. Sit down, please."

The bearskin was in place. There was no sign that it had been disturbed. The sheriff did not sit down. "That was a pretty big bear," he said, pointing to the rug in the middle of the floor.

"Yes, sir."

"Did you kill him?"

"I helped kill him. I shot him once."

He stepped forward and lifted the rug. "Yes, this is a pretty fair hide. And it's just big enough to cover your cellar door, ain't it?"

"It's more than large enough," she quietly answered.

He took hold of the leather strap by which the door was lifted, and looked up at her. She didn't wince. "What do you keep down in here, miss?"

"Potatoes. Shall I boil one for you?"

"Come, miss, no more foolishness. The murderer is down in that hole." He lifted the door. "Come out, young man, you are caught. Are you coming or shall I fire on you?"

"Why don't you go down and see?" the girl spoke up, smiling.

"I guess you are right. I'll go down." He lifted the door again and slowly went down into the cellar. The other man looked hard at the girl. She met his gaze without a tremor.

"Nobody here," said the sheriff, his head appearing above the floor. "Well, I'm much obliged to you for telling the truth, anyway. Let's walk up the river, Bill."

When they were gone, she held a light down into the darkness of the cellar. He was not there. How fortunate it was that he had not followed her instructions. But, after all, he could never get out of the woods. His capture was certain. She could see his eyes, his boyish mouth. He could not be guilty. In her judgment no evidence could have overcome his smile. Night came, and a heavy rain began to fall.

"If they bring hounds, his track will be cold," she said, when there came a soft tap at the door.

"Who is it?" she asked.

"The man who was dazzled."

She opened the door, and there he stood.

"Oh, why did you come back here?"

"To see you," he answered, stepping inside.

"But they will get you."

"They won't think I'm here. I heard them talking. I live in a hollow tree," he added.

He told her about himself. He had just graduated from a medical college. For recreation he and a friend had come down in that country to hunt and had been hunted.

"One day my friend, not feeling very well, did not leave camp," said he. "I wandered a long ways off, and about noon went into a house to buy some bread. The door stood open—no one had answered my call. On the floor lay an old man with his throat cut. In horror I ran out. In the road I was seized by a party of men, taken to the village and thrown into jail. I got out, and here I am. My name is John Wickly."

"I hear them coming," she cried.

"I will get down into the cellar."

"I have nailed the door down," she moaned.

He looked up and his eyes swept the wall. He snatched down a long skirt, and put it on. With his heel he quickly ground to dust a piece of charcoal, and blacked his face and hands. He put on a sunbonnet and pulled it close about his neck. "I used to play in the college minstrels," he said. "Lie on the couch and throw the cover over you."

There came a knock at the door.

"Come in," he cried, and two men entered. "Skuze me, gen'lemen, but walk saft. She sick."

The lamp was bad, the light poor. The men were blear-eyed with liquor. They sat down on a bench.

"Got anything to drink in the house?" one of them asked; and in well-mouthed negro conceit came the answer: "Huh, ain't got nothing ter drink in de house ner nowhar else."

"Have you got something to eat, then?"

"Huh, we had something ter eat den, but we ain't got nothing now. I been so busy I ain't had time ter cook. Kain't wash an' iron an' take care of a sick lady an' cook much. But you'll please skuze us fo' de present. We ain't prepared ter take kere ob comp'ny, an' darfo' we wishes you a good-ebenin'."

"Come on, Bill," said the leader, and they strode out.

He knew that his disguise would not serve him so well by daylight, so when the sun rose he went back to his hollow tree.

Several nights had passed since there had been an alarm. He sat down without his disguise. So wrapped was he in a love-deepened study of her face that the bay of a bloodhound would not have startled him. "And you have always lived here? Yet you seem to be the world's philosophy feminized. Nothing surprises you. I think that such self-possession could be taught only—"

"Some one is coming," she said.

He had no time to disguise himself. The nails had been drawn out of the cellar door, but he did not try to hide.

The sheriff entered. "Good evening, young fellow. And how do you find yourself, miss? I dropped in to tell you that a mistake has been made. You didn't kill the old man, mister. Yes, sir, and I have come out to look for you, to apologize to you in the name of the county. We have known all about your capers for some time. Your nigger dodge was good, but the boys saw through it at once. But the case had gotten a little suspicious, and we thought we'd let it run along for a while, knowing that we could pick you up at any time we wanted you. Good evening. Drop in and see me some time."

The young man sat looking at the girl. "Let us row the boat together," he said. "Shall we?"

"Yes, out upon a greater river."

He took her hand, and led her down to the bank of the stream, and in the moonlight they stood upon the shore, listening to the rippling of the water.

NATURE PROVIDES FOR SICK WOMEN

a more potent remedy in the roots and herbs of the field than was ever produced from drugs.

In the good old-fashioned days of our grandmothers few drugs were used in medicines and Lydia E. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., in her study of roots and herbs and their power over disease discovered and gave to the women of the world a remedy for their peculiar ills more potent and efficacious than any combination of drugs.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

MASURY'S HOUSE PAINTS

WILL NOT RUN, RUB OFF OR SPOT

DON'T act in the matter of selecting house paints until you are satisfied that you know the paints possessing those indispensable qualities of preservation and durability which make the ideal house paint. Masury's House Paints are not the only paints on the market, but an experience extending over a period of sixty-five years has proved them, beyond the shadow of doubt, to be the best.

They will not run, wrinkle or spot.

They will not chalk, rub off, flake off, peel or blister.

They are famously superior to all other house paints in brilliancy of finish, durability of color, preservative strength and uniform smoothness. One gallon of Masury's House Paints will cover a greater surface than other house paints, which equalizes the first expense. Their great economy is practically demonstrated by the established fact that they will remain intact, in every respect, years after inferior paints have disappeared. The paints that defer repainting for the longest period are the paints that are the cheapest. This is the predominant merit of Masury's House Paints, manufactured and sold for more than half a century by the house of

OLD SORES FED AND KEPT OPEN

BY IMPURITIES IN THE BLOOD

Whenever a sore refuses to heal it is because the blood is not pure and healthy, as it should be, but is infected with poisonous germs or some old blood taint which has corrupted and polluted the circulation. Those most usually afflicted with old sores are persons who have reached or passed middle life. The vitality of the blood and strength of the system have naturally begun to decline, and the poisonous germs which have accumulated because of a sluggish and inactive condition of the system, or some hereditary taint which has hitherto been held in check, now force an outlet on the face, arms, legs or other part of the body. The place grows red and angry, festers and eats into the surrounding tissue until it becomes a chronic and stubborn ulcer, fed and kept open by the impurities with which the blood is saturated. Nothing is more trying and disagreeable than a stubborn, non-healing sore. The very fact that it resists ordinary remedies and treatments is good reason for suspicion; the same germ-producing cancerous ulcers is back of every old sore, and especially is this true if the trouble is an inherited one. Washes, salves, nor indeed anything else, applied directly to the sore, can do any permanent good; neither will removing the sore with caustic plasters or the surgeon's knife make a lasting cure. If every particle of the diseased flesh were taken away another sore would come, because the trouble is in the blood, and the BLOOD CANNOT BE CUT AWAY. The cure must come by a thorough cleansing of the blood. In S. S. S. will be found a remedy for sores and ulcers of every kind. It is an unequalled blood purifier—one that goes directly into the circulation and promptly cleanses it of all poisons and taints. It gets down to the very bottom of the trouble and forces out every trace of impurity and makes a complete and lasting cure. S. S. S. changes the quality of the blood so that instead of feeding the diseased parts with impurities, it nourishes the irritated, inflamed flesh with healthy blood. Then the sore begins to heal, new flesh is formed, all pain and inflammation leaves, the place scabs over, and when S. S. S. has purified the blood the sore is permanently cured. S. S. S. is for sale at all first class drug stores. Write for our special book on sores and ulcers and any other medical advice you desire. We make no charge for the book or advice.

I was afflicted with a sore on my face of four years' standing. It was a small pimple at first but it gradually grew larger and worse in every way until I became alarmed about it and consulted several physicians. They all treated me but the sore continued to grow worse. I saw S. S. S. advertised and commenced its use and after taking it a while I was completely cured. My blood is now pure and healthy from the effect of S. S. S., and there has not been any sign of the sore since S. S. S. cured it.

NEW FACE FOR THE SEAL.

Instrument of State's Approval Will Be Made Like New.

"The great seal of the State of Minnesota" is to have a "new face."

Ever since 1881 the seal has done daily business, putting the state's "trademark" on documents representing sometimes in one instrument several millions of dollars.

The year 1881 saw the burning of the old capitol, when a legislature was in session. The great seal, the original seal, then in use, disappeared in the confusion. It was found a short time after, but not before the present seal had been made and put in service. As a result the old seal was relegatad to the state historical society where it now has an honored place. Continual use of the present seal has somewhat worn down the face, and Julius Schmahl has declared his intention of presenting the time-honored instrument, which has done yeoman service for 26 years, with the needed fresh countenance.

LAST CONCERT WELL ATTENDED

The Series Under the Auspices of the Study Club Is Now Completed.

There was a large audience at the Metropolitan opera house to hear the Colonial Saxaphore Quartette—the attraction secured to complete the series of entertainments given under the auspices of the Study club.

The honors of the evening were easily carried off by Miss Victoria Lynn, whose recitations and an impersonation of the actions of an old negro when he hears the strains of that old Southern melody "'Way Down in Dixie" were very good.

The singing of the quartet was far above the average and they responded to numerous encores.

Messrs. Aitkins and Mack in a cornet duet delighted the audience, and in response to the applause rendered another number.

The singing of Messrs. Williams and McCormick was another of the pleasing features and they responded to several encores.

The numbers rendered on the saxaphones by the entire company were meritorious.

The company is well balanced and will achieve success wherever they appear.

Mr. L. C. Simons, on behalf of the study club thanked the present audience and citizens in general for their attendance at the concerts, and said that there was a good sum in the treasury of the Study Club to turn over to the High School Library for the benefit of which the concerts were given. He also stated that the club had been encouraged in their work, and assured those present that next winter another series would be arranged.

The sum of $33.93 was deposited to the credit of the Library fund.

Wooden Clothes.

Wooden clothing is now made of spun pulp. Waistcoats of this material, said to be as durable as leather, are already on the market, and may be followed by suits of the best spruce. "Spruce up" may thus acquire a new and more exact meaning. Particular people and those who seek the best in beer say that golden grain belt beer is not only the purest of all beverages, but also the most beneficial to the body and mind. It's a pleasure to tell our readers about a Cough Cure like Dr. Shoop's. For years Dr. Shoop has fought against the use of opium, Chloroform, or other unsafe ingredients commonly found in cough remedies. Dr. Shoop, it seems, has welcomed the Pure Food and Drug Law recently enacted, for he has worked along similar lines for many years. For nearly 20 years Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure containers have had a warning printed on them against Opium and other narcotic poisons. He has thus made it possible for mothers to to protect their children by simply insisting on having Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. Sold by all dealers.

STILL ANOTHER.

Hallock is one of the latest Red River Valley towns to get into the "creamery game" and at a meeting which was held recently by the farmers of that vicinity a full creamery outfit of machinery was purchased and one of the largest and best equipped creameries in the Northwest will be opened there in the spring.

"Almost every and village in the Red River Valley is now equipped with a creamery" said M. J. Cort, the creamery man and the farmers in the vicinity of these creamery towns are beginning to realize that they are regular money mints for them. NEW SEED CONTEST.

Outline of Plans for Seed Grain Contest—Arrangements for Better and Larger Exhibit.

Principal D. D. Hayne of the School of Agriculture, has given the following brief statement of the plans for the contest to be held in Minnesota for 1907. The contestants are students in the schools of the state.

The plans for the contest this year are not fully matured, but a general outline is here given so that the county superintendents and teachers throughout the state may commence the work immediately.

Corn—The contest in corn will be carried on just as outlined in Rural School Bulletin no. 2.

Wheat and Oats—The contest in wheat and oats will be simplified somewhat. Instead of requiring each contestant to have a seed plot of one-fourth acre or more set aside especially for him, he will be allowed to make his selection of ten heads of the grain from any field on his home farm and may present these with a peck of the grain from the same field. The student then becomes the selecter and grader of wheat and oats, and not the grower necessarily. This will avoid the necessity of the student being put to the trouble of threshing seed plots separately.

Vegetable Exhibits—Prizes will be awarded for the best potatoes exhibited and grown by the contestants. Prizes will also be awarded for the best exhibit of five different vegetables grown by the contestants.

Fruit Exhibit—Prizes for the best apples grown on the home farm of the student, and selected by him will be awarded. The various classes in this contest will be published later and the prizes stated.

Contests in sewing and cooking for the girls are here outlined:

Needlework—Five classes: Hand-made work apron; hand made fancy apron; specimen of patching; specimen of darning; dressed doll.

Cooking Exhibit—Four classes: Wheat bread, one loaf; brown bread, one loaf; corn bread, one loaf; cake (fruit, chocolate, cocoanut or sponge).

The State contest will be held December 19, 20 and 21. The first day of the contest will be given to placing the exhibits and viewing the State capitol. The second day will be spent at the School of Agriculture, where instruction will be given in agriculture, horticulture, domestic science and domestic art.

It is to be hoped that each County Superintendent will head a delegation of teachers and students from his or her county and that the school boards throughout the State will allow teachers who go with the pupils to the State meeting to close their schools on the 19th and 20th of December.

The best work can be done when the boys and girls in the schools of the State are organized into clubs. It is suggested that a "Boys' Farm Club" and a "Girls' Home Club" be organized in each school, also that the county organization of these school clubs be formed. At the next annual State contest a State Federation of Boys' and Girls' clubs will be organized on this basis.

Sufficient plans are here given to enable the County Superintendent to organize and push the work in his county. The study and work in the schools this winter are a necessary preliminary to successful contests in the fall. It is urged that the work in each county of the State be pushed forward immediately.

FINE EXHIBITS OF POULTRY

At the Annual Show of the Red River Valley Association—Election of Officers.

The Poultry show held in Crookston during the past week by the Red River Valley Poultry association was largely attended and the exhibits were up to the usual high standard.

Several Minneapolis and St. Paul poultry fanciers and raisers who had fully intended to make an exhibition at this show were unable to do so because of the delayed railroad traffic. The railroads would not take the birds for such a long haul, except at the owners' risk, as they might get stalled somewhere on account of snow and freeze or starve to death. However, the out-of-town entries were far beyond that of other years and some very fine pens of birds were shipped in from various valley towns. Probably the largest single exhibitor at the show was T. J. Couch, of Grand Forks. A. Sanderstrom, of Lengby, was another large out-of-town exhibitor. Among the other exhibitors were the following: Wise Bros. of Eldred; Kelsvin Bros., of Gentilly; M. L. Converse, of Red Lake Falls; Frank T. Farley, of Red Lake Falls; Harry Hewiston, of Ojjata, N. Indigestion

Stomach trouble is but a symptom of, and not in itself a true disease. We think of Dyspepsia, Heartburn, and Indigestion as real diseases, yet they are symptoms only of a certain specific Nerve sickness—nothing else.

It was this fact that first correctly led Dr. Shoop in the creation of that now very popular Stomach Remedy—Dr. Shoop's Restorative. Going direct to the stomach nerves, alone brought that success and favor to Dr. Shoop and his Restorative. Without that original and highly vital principle, no such lasting accomplishments were ever to be had.

For stomach distress, bloating, biliousness, bad breath and sallow complexion, try Dr. Shoop's Restorative—Tablets or Liquid—and see for yourself what it can and will do. We sell and cheerfully recommend

NORTHWEST IS IN BLIZZARD'S GRASP

ALREADY BAD CONDITIONS ARE MADE MUCH WORSE—TRAINS BLOCKED.

LONG, HARD FIGHT FOR ROADS

WINTER HAS BEEN LONG BLIZZARD—DEATH AND SUFFERING IN DAKOTA.

St. Paul, Feb. 5. — The Northwest, from Wisconsin to Montana, is in the grasp of a cold wave and an accompanying blizzard that is doing much to make already bad conditions much worse. No extreme cold is recorded, although in the Dakotas, Montana and Western Canada the range is far below zero. The high winds from the northwest and the snow flurries add to the discomfort. The range in temperature in the Dakotas, Montana and Western Canada is from 8 to 32 degrees below zero.

Long and Hard iFght.

The railroads of the Northwest have been engaged ever since Thanksgiving in the biggest struggle in their history. Realizing that the vast commerce of the country has to be moved as promptly as possible in order to meet the wants and needs of the people, the railroad officials have spared neither effort nor expense in keeping the lines open.

The roads have been confronted with the worst blizzards that have swept the prairies of North Dakota in thirty years.

North Dakota Trains Blocked.

Fargo, Feb. 5.—What is by far the worst storm of the winter and one of the worst which ever swept over North Dakota is just subsiding after having wrought havoc with the train service and occasioning much suffering among the many people who are short of fuel.

Beginning Friday afternoon the blizzard raged with unabated fury until last evening. Sweeping across vast open plains, driving huge quantities of snow before it and piling the beautiful in deep drifts, it put an end to all traffic not only in North Dakota, but in Western Minnesota as well, and resulted in a complete tie-up of all the railroads in this part of the country.

Not a Train Moved.

From 2 o'clock yesterday morning until 7 o'clock last evening not a train arrived in Fargo over any of the roads either from the east or west.

Relief for the people residing in towns along the Jamestown, Northern and Fargo Southwestern branches of the Northern Pacific, who were badly in need of fuel and provisions, was furnished by trains. Those lines are again blocked. It will probably be some time before they are opened to traffic.

Death and Suffering.

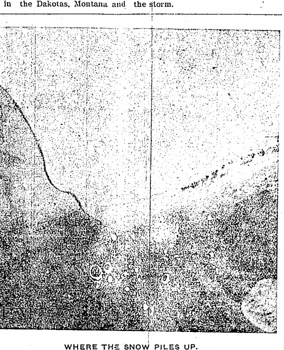
That the present storm has carried great suffering and death in its trail there can be little doubt.

Many towns throughout the state were already short of fuel and the blizzard aggravated this condition, but it is among the homesteaders that the greatest suffering exists, and scores of those have undoubtedly perished in the storm.

T. M. Krueger, a homesteader residing twenty-one miles northwest of Williston, who reached here yesterday, stated that within a radius of eight miles of his home seven men had frozen to death on their claims.

South Dakota Hard Hit.

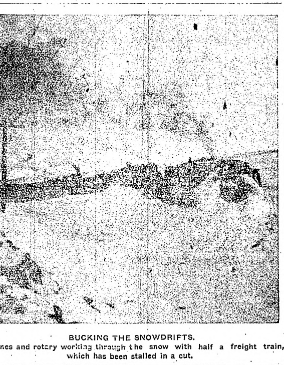
Pierre, S. D., Feb. 5.—Reports received by phone from points within a radius of fifty miles indicate that the storm of yesterday afternoon and last night was a severe blizzard out in the open, but luckily did not last long. So far as known no lives were lost, but several who were caught on the prairie had a hard time to find shelter.



WHERE THE SNOW PILES UP.
One of the big drifts, 760 feet long and from one to sixteen feet deep.

Killed in Wreck.

Woodland, Cal., Feb. 5.—A Southern Pacific train was wrecked north of Dunnigan, probably by a broken rail. The express messenger was killed and his assistant was slightly injured.



BUCKING THE SNOWDRIFTS.
Engines and rotary working through the snow with half a freight train, which has been stalled in a cut.

New Counterfeit.

Washington, Feb. 5.—Chief Wilkie of the secret service has announced the appearance of a new counterfeit $20 national bank note on the Marietta bank of Marietta, I. T.

Janitor Found Frozen Stiff.

St. Paul, Feb. 5. — George Harris, colored, was found frozen stiff yesterday morning in a room in a lodging house where he had been employed as a janitor. The coroner expressed the belief that he had died of heart trouble.

Three Frozen to Death.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Feb. 5. — A woman and two children were found frozen to death yesterday afternoon in an upstairs tenement here, with a third child in an adjoining room badly frozen but alive.

Burned to Death by Explosion.

Cleveland, Feb. 5. — John Burke aged twenty-two years, was burned to death, and Mary Gardner Masterson, aged twenty years, was seriously burned last night by an explosion of a gasoline lamp.

JEROME GRILLS THAW WITNESS

ALIENIST IS SUBJECTED TO MOST SEVERE CROSS-EXAMINATION.

DEFENSE BLOCKED BY JEROME

ATTEMPT TO PROVE INSANITY IN BRANCHES OF THAW FAMILY FAILS.

New York, Feb. 6. — The state laid its case against Harry K. Thaw yesterday in a plain, unemotional story of the shooting on the Madison Square Garden roof, leaving the malice and the motive to be inferred from the act and the defense replied with a plea of hereditary insanity. It was asserted that Thaw in slaying Stanford White believed he was acting as an agent of Providence; that real or fancied wrongs committed against him by the architect and former friend of his wife had boiled and bubbled in his brain until at last there came the explosive impulse to kill.

Made No Move to Escape.

When the deed was done Thaw made no move to escape its consequence, but holding the fatal revolver aloft, he stood as if mutely proclaiming to the world: "The deed is done: it was right; it was not wrong."

Thus Thaw's counsel outlined his case to the jury yesterday afternoon after the prosecution had occupied less than two hours of the morning sitting of the court in relating through eye witnesses the narrative of the tragedy.

Wife and Mother to Testify.

"You will hear the story of this man's insanity," Attorney John B. Gleason, for the defense, promised the jury, "from his mother, from his wife, from his relatives and from his physicians. You will judge him by his acts, by the hereditary and stress which entered into his madness, and when you come to judge him you will say to yourself that his act may have been one of insanity, but it was not one of crime."

Second Day of Actual Trial.

New York, Feb. 7. — The task of proving to a jury that Harry Thaw was insane—through heredity and mental stress—when he shot and killed Stanford White, was taken up yesterday by the defense, but when adjournment was announced it was the general opinion that but little progress had been made. Thaw's attorneys endeavored in vain to present before the jury evidence tending, it was said, to prove a strain of insanity in the collateral branches of the defendant's family, but they were blocked at every point by District Attorney Jerome.

Says Thaw Was Insane.

The defense, however, got before the jury the testimony of an expert, that in his opinion Harry Thaw was suffering from insanity the night of the tragedy. Mr. Jerome undertook to break down the evidence of the alienist, Dr. C. C. Wiley of Pittsburg, and for three hours put him through a cross-examination as severe as was ever heard in any court. The district attorney astonished every one by his intimate knowledge of medicine and its technical phraseology. He hurled volleys of technical questions at the witness, who at times sat mute and at other times gave evasive replies.

A Hypothetical Question.

Dr. Wiley testified that he predicated his opinion as to Thaw's insanity upon his actions the night of the tragedy as described to him in a hypothetical question propounded by the defense and upon an incident which he witnessed on a Pittsburg street car during the summer of 1905. Thaw, said the doctor, acted irrationally on the car, coming in suddenly and perking up one of the window blinds, slamming it down and then lifting it again, the while engaging in a wordy war with the conductor.

Thaw's Cousin on Stand.

Among the witnesses called in an attempt to show that a strain of insanity existed in certain branches of the Thaw family was Lee Thaw, who said that his father and Harry Thaw's father were first cousins. The defense tried to draw from the witness that his father had died in an insane asylum. Mr. Jerome objected on the ground that the relationship was too far removed, and the objection was sustained.

GIFT OF $32,000,000 BY ROCKEFELLER

MAKES TOTAL OF $43,000,000

GIFT INTENDED FOR GENERAL EDUCATION PURPOSES—BIG SURPRISE.

New York, Feb. 9.—Thirty-two millions dollars' worth of income-bearing securities was the gift which John D. Rockefeller, through his son, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., announced to the general education board when it assembled for a special meeting in this city late yesterday afternoon.

For general education purposes throughout the country is given as the purpose of this donation—the largest single prize ever handed out for such a purpose.

Mr. Rockefeller had previously given the board $11,000,000 for the same work, his contributions now amounting to $43,000,000.

Was Big Surprise.

The general education board apparently was not prepared for this gift, which was announced simply in the following letter, signed by John D. Rockefeller, Jr.:

"My father authorizes me to say that on or before April 1, 1907, he will give to the general board income-bearing securities the present market value of which is about $32,000,000, one-third to be added to permanent endowment of the board; two-thirds to be applied to such specific objects within the corporate purposes of the board as either he or I may from time to time direct; any remainder not so designated at the death of the survivor to be added to the permanent endowment of the board."

Board Accepts Gift.

Most of the members of the board were surprised at the announcement and amazed at the size of the gift. A special meeting of the board was called for yesterday to consider a communication from Mr. Rockefeller, the purport of which was not known John D. Rockefeller, Jr., acting for his father, appeared shortly after the meeting was called to order and handed the letter to the secretary.

The board voted to accept the gift and sent a letter of appreciation to the elder Mr. Rockefeller.

STATE'S JUBILEE GIVEN BOOST.

Legislators, merchants, manufacturers, farmers and newspaper men joined in declaring for the project of a great Minnesota exposition in 1908 at the banquet given by the St. Paul Commercial club. A score of speakers were heard and the consensus of opinion was that Minnesota is big enough to understake the arrangement of a vast interstate exposition and that there can be no more fitting occasion than the semi-centennial of statehood in 1908.

The main purpose of the gathering was to consider the general scope and plans to be submitted to the legislature. This was done by Joseph T. Mannix, chairman of the semi-centennial commission; Eli S. Warner, who presided over the gathering; C. N. Costello, president, and E. W. Randall, secretary, of the State Agricultural society.

It was decared that with an appropriation of $1,500,000 a creditable exposition can be arranged, but $2,500,000 would be nearer the right amount in order to make it worthy of the state and one that will compel attention. Such a fair, it was argued, would not only advertise the state to the entire world, but would bring a great many visitors to Minnesota, and in the end attract numerous settlers.

The principal speakers were confident that no matter what the proposed exposition costs it will repay the people of the state within a short time, and it will prove not an expense, but a profitable investment.

GOING AFTER THINGS.

There is a great deal of comment in the press of Northern Minnesota at present as to what town is to get the new normal school, which will be located in this district.

No matter who gets it, those who must bear the disappointment of defeat have the knowledge of having made an effort for their town. They have brought before the public the fact that there is energy and push in their town or city. Nothing comes without an effort. It is the continual "going after things" that get them. No matter how great may be the difficulties or how remote the chances of success, the effort shows outsiders that the town is alive and pushing.

The Courier believes in making an attempt to get everything there is to "be got," and admires enterprise of those who have energy enough to make the effort.

A little more enthusiasm about our town: a little more push and effort, would make Red Lake Falls the town it should, and some day is bound to be. But why wait? Go after it now.

There are many enterprises that would locate here if only the proper effort and spirit were employed to induce them to do so. Go after it now.

The Waconia Patriot, Waconia, Minn., enters upon its second year under the present editor, Charles A. Reil. Mr. Reil has reason to be proud of the success of this paper and has made a hopeless country sheet into a "real live newspaper" in the short space of one year. The Courier wishes continued success to the Patriot and its genial, good-natured editor.

Sportsmen all over the state are "up in arms" against the proposed law to close the game-bird season for two years.

The paper trust informs the country editors, through the wholesale paper houses, that the price of paper will advance. The price of the Courier is still the same, but it seems some of our subsbribers have forgotten what the price really is. We will say for their information that a call at the office or a letter addressed to the Courier will set them right on any points desired.

Bemidji, Cass Lake or Thief River Falls—which will get the new normal school?

We are still waiting for the next county seat move of Thief River.

LENTEN SEASON COMMENCES

Ash Wednesday Was Ushered in By the Blessing of Ashes and Other Services in the Churches.

The season of Lent has commenced and those who desire to keep it in a fitting manner must subject themselves to prayer and fasting for the next forty days, except in cases of sickness and old age; also those under the age of 21.

Bishop McGolrick, of the diocese of Duluth, has issued his annual instructions to the parishes of the diocese regarding Lent, from which are taken the following extracts:

All the days of Lent, the Sundays excepted, are days of fast. The precept of fast restricts the use of food to one full meal in the middle of the day and a collation in the evening not exceeding one-fourth part of a full meal—custom, however, authorizing the taking of a cup of coffee, tea or chocolate, with a small piece of bread. When the full meal, or principal repast cannot be taken without serious inconvenience toward the middle of the day, the order of repasts may be reversed, the full meal or principal repast being taken in the evening, and the collation at an earlier hour in the day.

The use of flesh meat is allowed at all meals on Sundays and at the principal meal on Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, except the Saturday of Ember week (Feb. 23) and the Saturday of Holy Week (March 30).

The use of flesh meat, therefore, is forbidden at all meals on Wednesdays, Fridays, the Saturdays of Ember Week and the Saturday of Holy Week; and on other days, outside of Sundays, it is forbidden at other repasts, outside the full meal. The use of lard is permitted at all times in the preparation of food. Both fish and flesh meat cannot be taken at the same meal, even on Sundays. Persons legitimately excused or dispensed from the precept of fasting may use flesh meat at all meals on whatever day there is a general permission to use it at the principal meal.

From the precept of fast are excused: Those under the age of 21 years or over 60; the infirm and the convalscent; women bearing or nursing children, persons engaged in hard labor or other duties exhaustive of physical strength; persons who from poverty are unable to procure for the principal meal a sufficiency of nutritive food. From the precept of abstinence are excused: The young under the age of seven years; the sick; persons who are so situated as not to be able to procure for themselves abstinence food.

In virtue of the authority conceded to Bishops of the United States by a recent Pontifical Indult, permission is granted to "working people" to use meat on all days of Lent, with the exception of Friday, Ash Wednesday, the Wednesday and the Saturday of Holy Week. The Sovereign Pontiff exhorts all who make use of the privileges of the Indult to be still mindful of their duty to practice self-denial; and he counsels that instead of the abstinence from meat some other sacrifice of bodily comfort be practiced, the Sovereign Pontiff himself suggesting as such sacrifice abstinence from intoxicating drink.

When doubt exists as to whether one's condition or circumstances allow exemption from the precept of fast and abstinence, counsel should be asked from confessors or pastors, who are the authoritative interpreters of the law and who are even empowered in special cases, for good and sufficient reasons, indicated in Catholic theology, to commute the precepts of fast and abstinence to other penitential works. In enjoining upon the faithful fast and abstinence, Holy Church makes a practical application of the evangelical law of self-denial, of which the Saviour and his apostles were, by example and by word, such eminent teachers. Without self-denial there is no Christianity. Indeed, without self denial there is no natural morality. The man who has not acquired by habit the power of self-restraint will not be victorious over sin, amid the storms and temptations of life which all men must encounter.

The observance of the fast and abstinence prescribed by the church is taken by the world as a public and fearless profession of Catholic faith. He who, without sufficient or obvious reasons, eats meat or takes his usual meals when abstinence or fast is enjoined, is not accepted as a practical Catholic. The devotion of the Way of the Cross will be observed, when possible, in all churches and chapels, on the Friday evenings throughout Lent.

HOME MADE CATARRH CURE.

Any one can mix right at home the best remedy of its kind known. The name "Cyclone" is given to the following prescription, it is supposed, because of its promptness in driving from the blood and system every vestage of catarrhal poison, relieving this foul and dread disease, no matter where located. To prepare the mixture: Get from any good pharmacy one-half ounce Fluid Extract Dandelion, one ounce Compound Kargon and three ounces of Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla. Shake well and use in teaspoonful doses after each meal and at bedtime.

This is a harmless, inexpensive mixture, which has a peculiar action upon the eliminative tissues of the Kidneys, assisting them to filter and strain from the blood and system all catarrh poisons which, if not eradicated, are absorbed by the mucous membrane, and an open sore or catarrh is the result.

Prepare some and try it, as it is the prescription of an eminent catarrh specialist of national reputation.

Caution.

Imitations have been placed upon the market so closely resembling Allcock's Plasters in general appearance as to be well calculated to deceive. It is, however, in general appearance only that they compare with Allcock's, for they are not only lacking in the best elements which have made Allcock's so efficient, but are often harmful in their effects. Remember that Allcock's are the original and only genuine porous plasters—the best external remedy known—and when purchasing plasters the only safe way is to always insist upon having Allcock's.

MANY SOURCES OF SALT.

That From Natural Springs Is Generally Most Nearly Pure.

The purity of salt depends upon the source from which it is obtained and the sanitary conditions under which it is prepared for the market. The supply of common salt, the most indispensable of all the seasoning substances both as a relishing condiment and a well-nigh universal food preservative, is exhaustless, yet even so there is salt and salt.

Formerly salt was obtained by evaporating ocean water, a process that left many impurities in the residuum, to say nothing of its exposure to all kinds of dirt in its shipment from seaports. The Turk's island or rock salt, which is still largely used in pork packing and in the manufacture of ice creams, comes to the United States in holds of vessels continually subjected to dirt and foul odors. Upon its arrival it is again handled, then packed in coarse burlap bags, permitting dust to sift into the salt. In this condition it reaches the consumer.

Latterly, however, the product of salt springs has largely taken the lead in this country not only for table salt but for meat packing. The annual production from this source in the United States reaches more than $40,000,000 bushels, the State of New York, in the vicinity of Syracuse, furnishing a large proportion of this important supply.

MAY BE COFFEE

That Causes all the Trouble.

When the house is afire, it's like a body when disease begins to show, it's no time to talk but time to act—delay is dangerous—remove the cause of the trouble at once.

"For a number of years," says a Kansas lady, "I felt sure that coffee was hurting me, and yet, I was so fond of it, I could not give it up. I paltered with my appetite and of course yielded to the temptation to drink more. At last I got so bad that I made up my mind I must either quit the use of coffee or die.

"Everything I ate distressed me, and I suffered severely almost all the time with palpitation of the heart. I frequently woke up in the night with the feeling that I was almost gone,—my heart seemed so smothered and weak in its action that I feared it would stop beating. My breath grew short and the least exertion set me to panting. I slept but little and suffered from rheumatism.

"Two years ago I stopped using the old kind of coffee and began to use Postum Food Coffee, and from the very first I began to improve. It worked a miracle! Now I can eat anything and digest it without trouble. I sleep like a baby, and my heart beats full, strong and easily. My breathing has become steady and normal, and my rheumatism has left me. I feel like another person, and it is all due to quitting coffee and using Postum Food Coffee, for I haven't used any medicine and none would have done any good as long as I kept drugging with coffee." THE FATAL GLOVE.

BY CLARA AUGUSTA

CHAPTER I.

ARCH Trevlyn had had a good day. Business had been brisk. The rain had fallen steadily since daybreak, and the street crossings in New York were ankle deep in mud. The little street sweeper's arms ached fearfully, but his pocket was full of pennies, interspersed with an occasional half dime.

The clouds were breaking in the west, and a gleam of sunshine gilded the tall tower of St. John's. Arch shouldered his broom, and whistled a merry tune as he took his way homeward. His bright dark eyes sparkled as he thought how the sight of his earnings would cheer his feeble mother. She could have tea now, with real milk and some sugar in it, and an orange, too. Only yesterday she was wishing she had an orange.

Arch's way led past a horticulturist's store, and his eyes wandered longingly over the display of flowers in the window. He must have just one wee white rose, because, only the Sabbath before, while he sat at his mother's feet, she had wept in telling him about the sweet roses that used to grow under the window of the little country cottage where her happy youth had been spent.

The white rose would be like bringing back to her ever so little a bit of the happy past. It could not cost much, and Arch felt wealthy as a prince. He stepped into the store and asked the price of a white rose. The clerk answered him roughly:

"Get out of the store, you young rascal. You want to steal something."

"I am not a thief, sir," said the boy, proudly, his sallow cheeks crimsoning hotly. "I want a rose for my mother. I guess I can pay for it!"

"It's half a dollar, if you want it," said the man sneeringly. "Show your money, or take yourself off this minute!"

Arch's countenance fell. He had not half a dollar in all. He turned sadly away, his head drooping, his lip quivering. Oh, how very hard it was to be poor, he thought, looking enviously at the costly carriage with a pair of splendid grays, standing before the door.

"Stop, little boy!" said a sweet voice from somewhere among the roses and heliotropes. "Is your mother sick?"

Arch removed his cap—some inborn spirit of courtesy prompting him to be reverent toward the glorious vision which burst upon him. For a moment he thought he saw an angel; and almost expected that she would unfold her silvery wings, and vanish in a golden cloud from his sight. But after the first glance he saw that she was a little girl about his own age—eight or nine years old, perhaps—with yellow curls, deep hazel eyes, a mouth like a rosebud, and a blue silk frock. She repeated the question:

"Is your mother sick, little boy?"

"No, she is not sick, for she always sits up, and sews. But she is not strong, and her cheeks never have any color in them, like yours."

"And does she love flowers?"

"Yes, she loves them dearly. She kisses them always, when she has any. And that's not often."

"Does she? That's nice. Just like I do!" said the little girl in a pleased voice. "Mr. Burns"—to the gruff clerk—"here is a dollar. Give me some real nice roses, and two or three sweet pinks. The lady shall have some flowers. Tell her I sent them."

"Who shall I say sent them?"

"Margie Harrison. Will she know me, think?"

"I guess not. But it's all the same. I shall tell her you are one of the angels, any way. She knows about them, for she's told me ever so much about them."

The little girl laughed, and gave him the flowers.

"Don't soil them with your grimy hands," she said a little saucily; "and when you get home—let's see, what's your name?"

"Archer Trevlyn."

"Why, what a nice name! Just like names in a story book. I know some elegant people by the name of Trevlyn. But they live in a big house and have flowers enough of their own. So they can't be your folks, can they?"

"No, they're not my folks," replied the boy, with a touch of bitterness in his voice.

"Well, Archer, when you get home, you wash your face, do! It's so dirty."

The boy flushed hotly. If one of his companions had said that to him, he would have knocked him down instantly. But he forgave everything this little girl said, because she was so beautiful and kind.

"I am a street sweeper, miss."

"Oh, that accounts for it, then. It's very muddy today, and you must be tired. Hark! there's Florine calling me. Good-by, Archer."

She vanished, and a moment later the boy say her disappear within the glittering carriage, which, loaded down with fragrant blossoms, was driven slowly away. He stood a little while looking after it, then, pulling his cap down over his eyes, and grasping the stems of her flowers tightly in his little purple hand, he started home.

Home! It could hardly be called so, and yet it was home to Archer. His mother was there—the dear mother who was all the world to him. It was a poor part of the city—an old, tumble down wooden house, swarming with tenants, teeming with misery, filth and crime.

Up a crazy flight of steps, and turning to the right, Arch saw that the door of his mother's room was half open, and the storm had beaten in on the floor. It was all damp and dismal, and such an indescribable air of desolation over everything! Arch's heart beat a little slower as he went in. His mother sat in an arm chair by the window, an uncovered box in her lap, and a miniature locket clasped in her hand.

"Oh, mother! mother dearest!" cried Arch, holding up the flowers, "only look what I have got! An angel gave them to me! A very angel, with hair like the sunshine, and a blue frock, all real silk! And I have got my pocket full of pennies, and you shall have an orange, mother, and ever so many nice little things beside. See, mother dear!"

He displayed a handful of coin, but she did not notice him. He looked at her through the gloom of the twilight, and a feeling of terrible awe stole over him. He crept to her side and touched her cheek with his finger. It was cold as ice. A mortal pallor overspread his face; the pennies and the flowers rolled unheeded to the floor.

"Dead! dead! My mother is dead!" he cried.

He did not display any of the passionate grief which is natural to childhood—there were no tears in his feverish eyes. He took her cold hands in his own, and stood there all night long, smoothing back the beautiful hair and talking to her as one would talk to a sick child.

It was thus that Mat Miller found him the next morning. Mat was a little older than himself—a street sweeper, also. She and Arch had always been good friends; they sympathized with each other when bad luck was on them, and they cheered lustily when fortune smiled.

"Hurrah, Arch!" cried Mat, as she burst into the room: "it rains again, and we shall get a harvest! Good gracious, Arch! is—your—mother—dead?"

"Hush!" said the boy, putting down the cold hand; "I have been trying to warm her all night, but it's no use. Only just feel how like ice my hands are. I wish I was as cold all over, and then they would let me stay with my mother."

"Oh, Arch!" cried the girl, sinking down beside him on the desolate hearth, "it's a hard world to live in. I wonder if, when folks be dead, they have to sweep crossings, and be kicked and be cuffed round by old grandmas when they don't get no pennies? If they don't then I wish I was dead, too, Arch!"

"I suppose it's wicked, Mat. She used to say so. She told me never to get tired of waiting for God's own time—her very words, Mat. Well, now her time has come, and I am all alone—all alone! Oh, mother—mother!" He threw himself down before the dead woman, and his form shook with emotion, but not a tear came to his eyes. Only that hard, stony look of hopeless despair. Mat crept up to him and took his head in her lap, smoothing softly the matted chestnut hair.

"Don't take on so, Arch, don't!" she cried, the tears running down over her sunburnt face. "I'll be a mother to ye, Arch! I will, indeed! I know I'm a little brat, but I love you, Arch, and some time, when we get bigger, I'll marry you, Arch, and we'll live in the country, where there's birds and flowers, and it's just like the park all round. Don't feel so, don't!"

Arch pressed the dirty little hands that fluttered about him—for, next to his mother, he loved Mat.

"I will go out now and call somebody," she said; "there's Mrs. Hill and Peggy Sullivan, if she ain't drunk. Either of them will come!" And a few minutes later the room was filled with the rude neighbors.

They did not think it necessary to call a coroner. She had been ailing for a long time. Heart complaint, the physician said—and she had probably died in one of those spasms to which she was subject So they robed her for the grave, and when all was done, Arch stole in and laid the pinks and roses on her breast.

"Oh, mother! mother!" he said, bending over her in agony, "she sent them to you, and you shall have them! I thought they would make you so happy! Well, maybe they will now! Who can tell?"

The funeral was a very poor one. A kind city missionary prayed over the remains, and the hearse was followed to Potter's Field only by Mat and Arch—ragged and tattered, but sincere mourners.

CHAPTER II.

WHEN they came back Mat took Arch's hand and led him into the wretched den she called home.

"You shall stay here, Arch, with Grandma Rugg and me. She said you might if you'd be a good boy, and not plague the cat. Grandma's a rough one, but she ain't kicked me since I tore her cap off. I'm too big to be kicked now. Sit down, Arch; you know you can't stay at home now."

Yes, to be sure he could not stay there any longer. No one knew that any better than Arch. The landlord had warned him out that very morning. A half-quarter's rent was still due, and the meager furniture would hardly suffice to satisfy his claim. Hitherto, Mrs. Trevlyn had managed to pay her own expenses, but, now that she was gone, Arch knew that it was more than folly to think of renting a room. But he could not suppress a cry of pain when they came to take away the things, and when they laid their rude hands on the chair in which his mother died, poor Arch could endure no more, but fled out into the street and wandered about till hunger and weariness forced him back to the old haunt.

He accepted the hospitality of Grandma Rugg, and made his home with her and Mat. The influences which surrounded him were not calculated to develop good principles, and Arch grew rude and boisterous, like the other street boys. He heard the vilest language—oaths were the rule rather than the exception in Grigg Court, as the place was called—and gambling, and drunkenness, and licentiousness abounded. Still, it was singular how much evil Arch shunned.

But there was growing within him a principle of bitter hatred, which one day might embitter his whole existence. Perhaps he had cause for it; he thought he had, and cherished it with jealous care, lest it should be annihilated as the years went on.

From his mother's private papers he had learned much of her history that he had before been ignorant of. She had never spoken to him very freely of the past. She knew how proud and high his temper was, and acted with wisdom in burying the story of her wrongs in her own breast.

Her father, Hubert Trevlyn, had come of a proud family. There was no bluer blood in the land than that which ran in the veins of the Trevlyns. Not very far back they had an earl for their ancestor, and, better than that, the whole long lineage had never been tarnished by a breath of dishonor.

Hubert was the sole child of his father, and in him were centered many bright and precious hopes. His father was a kind parent, though a stern one who would never brook a shade of disobedience in this boy upon whom his fondest hopes and aspirations were fixed.

When Hubert was about twenty-four he went into the country for his health, which was never very robust, and while there he met Helen Crayton. It was a case of love at first sight, but none the less pure and steadfast on that account. Helen was an orphan—a poor seamstress, but beautiful and intelligent beyond any woman he had ever met. They loved, and they would not be cheated out of their happiness by any worldly opposition. Hubert wrote to his father, informing him of his love for Helen, and asking his consent to their union. Such a letter as he received in return! It bade him give up the girl at once and return home. If he ever spoke of her again he was disowned forever! He might consider himself houseless and homeless.

Hubert had some of the proud Trevlyn blood in his composition, and this letter roused it thoroughly. A week afterward he was the husband of Helen Crayton. He took his young wife to the city, and, having something of a talent for painting, he opened a studio, hoping to receive sufficient patronage from his friends to support his family in comfort.

NEW SUBMARINE BOAT.

In Which Three Men Can Live Under Water Twelve Hours.

Yet another submarine boat has been invented, or is it an old friend under an assumed name? Be this as it may, a submarine boat, ordered by the Brazilian government, was to be tried this week on the Seine, and the trials being satisfactory other and larger vessels are to be built, says the Court Journal. The new boat, which is named the Goubet, is some twenty-six feet long, about 5 feet 6 inches in diameter in the center, and has a displacement of about ten tons. The motive power is supplied by electricity, and the screw also serves the purpose of a rudder, the shaft being joined so as to enable it to be turned either to the right or to the left. Three men, the inventor claims, can live under water in the Goubet for twelve hours with the supply of compressed air. This has, of course, to be proved; but in the event of anything going wrong, a lead keel, weighing over a ton will be dropped, and the boat will at once come to the surface like a cork. On account of electricty being used for supplying the propelling power, the sphere of action of the new boat must of necessity be very limited, as compasses cannot be used, but it could do all that is required of it, if taken on board a vessel and launched when the enemy's ships were in sight. The Goubet's mission is to throw torpedoes, and if the arrangement for throwing these projectiles can be relied upon, she will prove a formidable antagonist. To sink the Goubet water is let into compartments in the lower part of the boat, and when it is sunk to any required depth in that position it remains exactly, the arrangement for sinking the vessel being so beautifully and carefully arranged. One ounce of water—more or less—will cause the boat to sink lower or come nearer the surface.

Floods of the Nile.

The floods of the Nile are so regular in their coming that for hundreds of years they have not varied ten days in the date of their arrival at a given point. The Nile mud, which renders Egypt a habitable country, is said to bear a striking resemblance to that which every season is brought down by Missouri

WHITE HOUSE CHINA

WOULD MAKE A MOST INTERESTING COLLECTION.

Unfortunately the Various "Sets" Used by Successive Presidents Have Been Two Widely Scattered to Admit of This.

One of the confessed hobbies of Col. William H. Crook, for 40 years executive clerk at the White House, is the presidential china. Col. Crook has made a thorough study of the White House ware, and himself possesses an interesting collection.

In it is one of the Madison plates which he discovered in a second-hand store. It is a small tea plate, with a narrow gold rim edging a wider pale blue band encircled by little golden stars. A broad, blue band comes next, edged with another band of gold. In the center of the plate is a medallion, outlined in gold and filled with tiny, badly blurred gold stars.

"No more interesting collection could possibly be made," said Col. Crook, "than one that would show the china used by each successive president. Unfortunately the White House has never had a curator whose duty it was to care for its furnishing, and at this late day it would be impossible to make such a collection. The existing specimens, however, are of much historic value, and should be preserved with the utmost care.

"Although George and Martha Washington never lived in the White House, yet the china which they used, both at Mt. Vernon and at the executive mansions in Philadelphia and New York, would properly come under this heading. Luckily for posterity, more of it is still extant than of the household ware of all the other early presidents combined. That Lady Washington was a typical colonial housewife, proud of her fine linen and china, is attested by her own and Gen. Washington's wills, in which disposition is made of quantities of those things.

"Most of Mrs. Washington's china descended first to her grandson, George Washington Parke Custis, and included the Cincinnati and Van Braam sets, besides many other specific pieces. By Mr. Custis it was left to the grandson, George Washington Custis Lee, the eldest son of Robert E. Lee. It will be recalled that during the civil war it was taken from the ancestral home of the Lees, at Arlington, and stored in the patent office with the other national collections. When the Arlington estate passed into the possession of the government, it, with other Washington relics, was placed on exhibition in the National museum. There it remained from 1883 until President McKinley relinquished it to Miss Mary E. Lee, in the summer of 1898.

"There are to be seen in this very interesting and valuable collection many pieces of the old blue and white earthenware, some of the gold-rimmed white French china set, and many unclassified pieces. There are also more than 30 dinner plates and soup plates and numerous dishes, platters, gravy bowls, and cups and saucers which belonged to the Van Braam and Cincinnati sets."

Postmaster Has Cinch.

Various authorities have passed on a letter received at the post office department some time ago and it has finally been sent to the postmaster general.

The letter came from a western postmaster at a small office and read:

"In accordance with the rules of the department I write you to inform you that on next Saturday I will close the post office for one day, as I am going on a bear hunt. I am not asking your permission to close, and you can discharge me if you want to. But I will advise you now that I am the only d— man in the county who can read and write."

It is not likely that the postmaster will be discharged.

Polite Senator Pettus.

It is generally agreed among occupants of the galleries at the capitol that the most polite and accommodating member of the senate is Mr. Pettus of Alabama, aged 85. One of the most rigid rules regarding elevators in the senate wing is that they must be run to accommodate senators, no matter who the other passengers may be. Mr. Pettus never allows this rule to be enforced in his case, always instructing the man to let the other passengers off wherever they wish to alight.

Alabamans Were Privileged.

Gov.-Elect Comer of Alabama visited the house of representatives in Washington a few days ago and was received so cordially that the resulting noise disturbed Speaker Cannon. On learning who the stranger was "Uncle Joe" waited until he had departed and then reminded Clerk Hines that under the rules governors-elect should not be admitted while the house is in session. "But then," he added, "those boys from Alabama don't know much about my rules and wouldn't believe in them if they did know."

House Adopts New Word.

John Wesley Gaines has added a new word to the language. He spoke of some changes that were made in the Congressional Record in its report of the colloquy between himself and Representative Underwood as "interpolated pencilaneous writing" in the stenographer's notes. The house grabbed "pencilaneous" eagerly and adopted it as its own.

Found Him All Right.

An Englishman traveling in Ireland complained that he could find none of the famous Irish wits of whom he had heard. He was advised to speak to the next farmer or teamster he met.

A little later he encountered a peasant leading a horse with a load of turf. The horse had a blazed face.

"What a white face your horse has, my man!" said the Englishman, by way of an opening.

"Sure," replied the Irishman, "your own will be as white when it has been as long in the halter."

He May Not Know.

A dog will follow a handful of rags wrapped around a homeless beggar day after day, through heat and cold and storm and starvation, just as faithfully as he will follow the purple of a king.

NERVOUS HEADACHES

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Will Cure Most Cases and Should Interest Every Sufferer.

Nobody who has not endured the suffering caused by nervous headache can realize the awful agony of its victims. Worst of all, the ordinary treatment cannot be relied upon to cure nor even to give relief. Some doctors will say that if a person is subject to these headaches there is nothing that can be done to prevent their recurrence.

Nervous headaches, as well as neuralgia, are caused by lack of nutrition—the nerves are starved. The only way to feed the nerves is through the blood and it is in this way that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have accomplished so many remarkable cures.

Mrs. Addie Merrill, of 39 Union Street, Auburn, Me., says: "For years I suffered from nervous headaches, which would come on me every five or six weeks and continue for several days. The pain was so severe that I would be obliged to go to bed for three or four days each time. It was particularly intense over my right eye. I tried medicines but got no relief. I had no appetite and when the headache passed away I felt as if I had been sick for a month. My blood was thin and I was pale, weak and reduced in weight.

"I read about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in a paper and decided to try them. I first noticed that they began to give me an appetite and I commenced to gain in weight and color. My headaches stopped and have not returned and I have never felt so well as I do now."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

FEARFUL BURNING SORES.

Boy in Misery 12 Years—Eczema in Rough Scales, Itching and Inflamed—Cured by Cuticura.

"I wish to inform you that your wonderful Cuticura has put a stop to twelve years of misery I passed with my son. As an infant I noticed on his body a red spot and treated same with different remedies for about five years, but when the spot began to get larger I put him under the care of doctors. Under their treatment the disease spread to four different parts of his body. The longer the doctors treated him the worse it became. During the day it would get rough and form like scales. At night it would be cracked, inflamed, and badly swollen, with terrible burning and itching. When I think of his suffering, it nearly breaks my heart. His screams could be heard downstairs. The suffering of my son made me full of misery. I had no ambition to work, to eat, nor could I sleep. One doctor told me that my son's eczema was incurable, and gave it up for a bad job. One evening I saw an article in the paper about the wonderful Cuticura and decided to give it a trial. I tell you that Cuticura Ointment is worth its weight in gold, and when I had used the first box of Ointment there was a great improvement, and by the time I had used the second set of Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment, and Cuticura Resolvent, my child was cured. SYSTEMATIC WARFARE WAGED TO WIPE OUT CONSUMPTION.

Warning That Intemperance Increases the Liability to Contract Disease —Neglected Colds a Prolific Source.

Organized effort is now being made throughout the United Stated to fight consumption. A warning is given against intemperate habits, which increase the liability to consumption, while spitting is public places is deprecated, as the disease is frequently contracted from dried sputum.

Colds should not be neglected, as they leave the lungs in a peculiarly receptive condition for the tubercular germ. The following simple formula will break up a cold in twenty-four hours. A leading authority on lung trouble says that when prepared from pure ingredients, it will cure any cough that is curable.

Take half ounce Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure); two ounces glycerine and half pint good whisky. Shake well and use in teaspoonful doses every four hours.

The ingredients can be secured from any good prescription druggist at small cost, and to avoid subsitution should be purchased separately and mixed in your own home.

Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure) is put up in half-ounce vials for dispensing. Each vial is securely sealed in a round wooden case, with engraved wrapper, with the name—Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure), prepared only by Leach Chemical Co., Cincinnati, O.—plainly printed thereon. There are many rank imitations of Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure), which are put out under various names, such as Concentrated Oil of Pine, Pine Balsam, etc. Never accept these as a substitute for the Pure Virgin Oil of Pine, as they will invariably produce nausea and never effect the desired result.

THE SADDEST WAR STORY.

Declared to Be That of the Returning Soldier Killed by His Father.

"The saddest war story that ever occurred has never been fully told so far as I know," said a man who followed Lee to the surrender at Appomattox. "I believe that Mrs. Chestnut in her 'Diary from Dixie' made a brief mention of the incident.

"I had forgotten it until I read the book. Then it came back to me as I heard it from one who was at the funeral. The man who told it died twenty years ago.

"The soldier had enlisted in Georgia from his home, where his father remained undisturbed during the struggle. The young man had fought through the war without a scratch, save a slight wound which had left him slightly deaf. This affliction he had never referred to in any of his letters.

"After the surrender he communicated with his father, saying he would reach home on or about a certain date. Travel then was uncertain and he was not positive as to when he would arrive.

"His father prepared to receive him. Believing that his son would come as promised, he arranged a spread, such as the conditions of his surroundings at that time would permit. He had brought out his best plate that had been secreted for a long time, and with gold which had been exhumed he bought such delicacies and substantials as the Southern market at that time afforded.

"As many of the old-time neighbors as were living in the vicinity were invited to the home coming of the returning soldier. The ex-Confederate arrived on the old plantation the night before the earliest date he had mentioned in his last letter. It was late, and his father and the family had retired.

"The only creature on the old place that seemed to be awake was a dog. As the soldier entered the gate of the grounds the dog began barking.

"The sound aroused the owner of the manor. The country was overrun at the time with stragglers, some of whom had not hesitated to commit burglary.

"The father of the returning boy arose. He stood in his doorway with his shotgun and challenged the approaching stranger, as he supposed.

"The young man being deaf made no reply, but continued on his way. The man in the doorway raised his gun and fired. The stranger fell dead

"The father summoned his family and the few remaining servants of the plantation. An investigation was held and the tragic truth was revealed.

"The father, of course, was inconsolable. He returned to his house while the servants carried the lifeless form of his boy to the home that had been awaiting his coming.

"The next day the invited guests began to arrive. The father had given orders that the tragedy should not be mentioned until he himself told it.

"I do not recall what explanation was made to the guests as to the absence of him whom they were to honor. But after the repast they were told, and then they filed past the dead.

"The body was wrapped in the flag for which the brave young man had fought. The community was used to funerals. Every private burial ground had a grave made by the unhappy war. But no funeral like this had ever taken place in the vicinity, and I doubt if ever had a counterpart in any state, North or South. I hope not."

DO BIRDS SYMPATHIZE?

Animals Experience Grief Over Loss of Young.

Animals experience grief over the loss of their young, but not over the death of one of their number. Death itself seems to have no meaning to them. When a bird seems to mourn for its lost mate its act is probably the outcry of the breeding instinct which has been thwarted.

Do the little birds and mammals sympathize with one another? When one bird utters a cry of distress the birds of other species within hearing will hasten to the spot and join in the cry—at least in the breeding season. I have no proof that they will do it at other times. And I do not call this sympathy, but simply the alarm of the paternal instinct, which at this season is very sensitive. The alarm cry of many birds will often put four-footed animals on the lookout. The language of distress and alarm is a universal language which all creatures understand more or less. But I doubt if sympathy as we know it—the keen appreciation of the suffering or the misfortune of another, which implies power in a measure to put ourselves in that other's place—even in its rudimentary form, exists among the lower orders.—Outing Magazine.

SHERIFF IN GAMBLING RAID.

A raid was made by Sheriff Webb and Under Sheriff Hubbard on rooms over a saloon in Billings where gambling was supposed to be in progress. Receiving no response to raps on the door, it was broken open. No one was in the room when officers entered, but several coats were hanging on the wall and a faro layout was in a conspicuous position, with chips scattered about in confusion. The layout was confiscated and taken to the sheriff's office.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

MOTHERHOOD

The first requisite of a good mother is good health, and the experience of maternity should not be approached without careful physical preparation, as a woman who is in good physical condition transmits to her children the blessings of a good constitution.

Preparation for healthy maternity is accomplished by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which is made from native roots and herbs, more successfully than by any other medicine because it gives tone and strength to the entire feminine organism, curing displacements, ulceration and inflammation, and the result is less suffering and more children healthy at birth. For more than thirty years has been the standby of American mothers in preparing for childbirth.

MRS. JAMES CHESTER

Note what Mrs. James Chester, of 427 W. 35th St., New York says in this letter:—Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—"I wish every expectant mother knew about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. A neighbor who had learned of its great value at this trying period of a woman's life urged me to try it and I did so, and I cannot say enough in regard to the good it did me. I recovered quickly and am in the best of health now."

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is certainly a successful remedy for the peculiar weaknesses and ailments of women.

It has cured almost every form of Female Complaints, Dragging Sensations, Weak Back, Falling and Displacements, Inflammation, Ulcerations and Organic Diseases of Women and is invaluable in preparing for Childbirth and during the Change of Life.

SKIN DISEASES

HUMORS IN THE BLOOD

When the blood is pure, fresh and healthy, the skin will be soft, smooth and free from blemishes, but when some acid humor takes root in the circulation its presence is manifested by a skin eruption or disease. These humors get into the blood, generally because of an inactive or sluggish condition of the members of the body whose duty it is to collect and carry off the waste and refuse matter of the system. This unhealthy matter is left to sour and ferment and soon the circulation becomes charged with the acid poison. The blood begins to throw off the humors and acids through the pores and glands of the skin, producing Eczema, Acne, Tetter, Psoriasis, Salt Rheum and skin eruptions of various kinds. Eczema appears, usually with a slight redness of the skin followed by pustules from which there flows a sticky fluid that dries and forms a crust, and the itching is intense. It is generally on the back, breast, face, arms and legs, though other parts of the body may be affected. In Tetter the skin dries, cracks and bleeds; the acid in the blood dries up the natural oils of the skin, which are intended to keep it soft and pliant, causing a dry, feverish condition and giving it a hard, leathery appearance. Acne makes its appearance on the face in the form of pimples and black heads, while Psoriasis comes in scaly patches on different parts of the body One of the worst forms of skin trouble is Salt Rheum; its favorite point of attack is the scalp, sometimes causing baldness. Poison Oak and Ivy are also disagreeable types of skin disease. The humor producing the trouble lies dormant in the blood through the Winter to break out and torment the sufferer with the return of Spring. The best treatment for all skin diseases is S. S. S. It neutralizes the acids and removes the humors so that the skin instead of being irritated and diseased, is nourished by a supply of fresh, healthy blood. External applications of salves, washes, lotions, etc., while they soothe the itching caused by skin affections, can never cure the trouble because they do not reach the blood. S. S. S. goes down into the circulation and forces out every particle of foreign matter and restores the blood to its normal, pure condition, thereby permanently curing every form of skin affection. Book on Skin Diseases and any medical advice desired sent free to all who write. S. S. S. is for sale at all first class drug stores.

I suffered with Eczema for forty years and could find nothing to cure me until I tried S. S. S. I suffered intensely with the itching and burning; pustules would form from which there flowed a sticky fluid; crusts would come on the skin and when scratched off the skin was left as raw as a piece of beef. I suffered agony in the long years I was afflicted, but when I used S. S. S. I found a perfect cure. There has never been any return of the trouble.

BIG FORTUNES IN SABLES.

With Skins at $450 Each Prices Soar Into the Thousands.

The two most expensive sable coats in the world are worn by the empress of Russia and Queen Maud of Norway.

The empress' coat is made from pure sables, the best which could be obtained in Europe, and is valued by an expert in furs at anything between $250,000 and $400,000, while that which Queen Maud wore at the guild hall recently would be worth nearly half as much.

The manager of a Regent street firm, says the London Mirror, said that within the last two years the price of sable had increased by 75 per cent and was still going up.

"The price is practically prohibitive," he said, "and we have to find a substitute in top Russian sable, smart sets of which cost as much at $1,000. If the same were made in real sable the price would be about $7,500 or more.

"There is as much gambling in sables as there is on the stock exchange. The furriers have all sold out and the demand is still great. People are now beginning to pass sables down as heirlooms—and valuable they are, too, at $450 a skin."

ONLY A YEAR.

One year ago a ringing voice,
  A clear blue eye,
And clustering curls of sunny hair,
  Too fair to die.

But where hast thou been this year, beloved?
  What hast thou seen—
What visions fair, what glorious life—
  Where thou hast been?

The veil, the veil, so thin, so strong,
  'Twixt us and thee:
The mystic veil, when shall it fall?
  That we may see?

Not dead, not sleeping, not even gone,
  But present still,
And waiting for the coming hour
  Of God's sweet will.

Lord of the living and the dead,
  Our Savior dear,
We lay in silence at thy feet
  This sad, sad year.

Mark Twain as a Critic.

A successful young novelist was praising the critical powers of Mark Twain.

"I once had the honor of reading a tale of mine to Mr. Clemens," he said, "and, thanks to his criticism, the tale was greatly improved. Originally it was too high-flown; he brought it down to earth, and made it homelier and truer.

"For instance, the tale concluded with these words:

"'Mabel's lovely eyes drooped for answer, a faint flush tinted her cheek, and she gave him both her hands; and there in the old orchard, in the shade of the heavy-fruited trees, he drew her to his breast, and, raising her long ringlets to his lips, kissed them reverently.'

"Mr. Clemens, at this ending, blew a cloud of smoke thoughtfully into the air, and as he watched the smoke dissolve, he drawled:

"'What do you think, now, honestly, of a young man who would go nibbling at a girl's back hair when she had her face with her?'"

That she who fishes for a husband seldom catches one worth while.

That in order to satisfy a man you might give him what he thinks he wants.

That many a man would be unable to paddle his own canoe if he could not borrow some other man's paddle.

That the average man is schooled to the belief that experience is not only a good but expensive teacher.

That it's almost as difficult for a detective to catch a criminal as it is for a prosecuting attorney to hold him.

That you should never judge a man's worth by his size. A silver dollar is much larger than a $10 gold piece.

HONOR WASHINGTON.

The birthday of George Washington was celebrated by a party given at the home of Thomas Germo Wednesday evening. About 25 persons were present and enjoyed a very pleasant evening. Cards were played and refreshments served.

The ladies having the party in charge were Mesdames Simou, Germo and Knox, and much credit is due them for the able manner in which they conducted the affair.

It's a pleasure to tell our readers about a Cough Cure like Dr. Shoop's. For years Dr. Shoop has fought against the use of opium, Chloroform, or other unsafe ingredients commonly found in cough remedies. Dr. Shoop, it seems, has welcomed the Pure Food and Drug Law recently enacted, for he has worked along similar lines for many years. For nearly 20 years Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure containers have had a warning printed on them against Opium and other narcotic poisons. He has thus made it possible for mothers to to protect their children by simply insisting on having Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. Sold by all dealers.

Eight Years Ago In Red Lake Falls

Clippings From the Courier of the Week of Feb. 23, 1899.

A gay little party was held in the rooms of Dr. Watson in the Bank block last evening—Washington's birthday. After a short period of dancing the participants adjourned to the home of C. E. Taylor, where an elegant lunch was served by Mesdames C. E. Taylor E. D. Vayo.

Mrs. Theo. LaBissoniere returned from Crookston Saturday.

Hon. Marcus Johnson arrived in the city yesterday from St. Paul.

Dr. Watson was a Crookston visitor Sunday, returning Monday.

Agent J. A. Duffy is suffering from a very severe attack of lagrippe.

Ernest Buse has purchased the M. A. Hatten residence on Bottineau Aye.

A number of young people drove out to the residence of J. A. Dwyer Saturday evening and held and enjoyable party.

Friday evening was a very mild one, and Taylor's band took advantage of the occasion to give an open air concert on the street, wafting sweet strains of music on the balmy air.

Monday evening being the 17th anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Zaiser, a number of the relatives of the family were invited to their residence on Hamilton Ave, where a very pleasant evening was spent.

Miss Emma Woodall of Crookston, was a guest of Mrs. E. F. Marshall on Sunday returning Monday.

J. B. Armstrong was at St. Hilaire and Thief River Falls on Monday taking orders for his popular cigars. Mrs. Armstrong accompanied him on the trip.

Owing to the soft disagreeable weather of the past week about every other person you meet has a husky voice—colds—Even the thaw caught cold yesterday.

A track has been cleared on the ice on the Clearwater river, and the owners of fast stock are doing a little training of their steeds preparing for a race that will no doubt be pulled off in the near future. Among them are J. A. Bray and Adolph Dufault.

The marriage of Herman Lindner to Mrs. Freda Schultz was performed Saturday by Judge Taylor. Mr. Lindner is one of Red Lake Falls' oldest residents.

L. J. Cadieux has resigned his position in Crookston and returned to our city.

The Madden boys brought in ten wolves Monday and received $50.00 in bounty from County Auditor Zeh. As the story goes George's knowledge of the rope throwing came in handy, as he chased one of the wolves with a horse until near enough to cast the line, catching the "varmint" in the loop in Western style.

Roof Skating Rink.

To enjoy the healthy sport of skating some 300 feet above the street level is probably a thing very few people have heard of. For about a year and a half, however, such a skating rink has existed on the roof of Philadelphia's most fashionable hotel. Another way to keep healthy is by the daily use of golden grain belt beer. Its daily use will aid your digestion, steady your nerves and build you up physically. Order of your nearest dealer or be supplied by Alex Thompson, Crookston.

KNOWS HIS BUSINESS.

Ed. F. Fahey, representing the Red Wing Advertising Co., one of largest calendar supply houses in the Northwest, was in the city during the past week displaying his samples. To say the least, Ed is a man who knows his business, and the firm which he represents made no mistake when they put him on the road in their interests, for if there is a sale to be made he can make it. There will always be a welcome at the Courier office for him whenever he visits Red Lake Falls.

He has been connected with the Red Wing firm for a long time and report this year as one of the best for his business.

ANNUAL FIRE TOURNAMENT

Executive Committee Formulate Plans for Coming Tournament to Be Held in This City.

The annual meeting of the executive committee of the Northern Minnesota Firemen's association was held at Crookston, Monday evening, to complete arrangements for the annual tournament to be held in this city.

It was decided to hold the tournament on June 18 to 21 inclusive. The reason why it is not to be held the last week in June, as was anticipated, was because of the fact that the district court of Marshall county will convene during that week, and would work hardships on the running teams, some of the members being officials of the court.

The rule pertaining to giving each man three trials in the coupling contests was modified so as to give each man but one trial.

In the hub and hub race an additional timekeeper will be provided to keep the time of both teams in each race.

Nearly all the members of the committee present agreed to have running teams take part in the tournament.

The cities represented at the meeting were: Crookston, Thief River Falls, Red Lake Falls, St. Hilaire, Hallock and Warren.

Blackduck and Bemidji were not represented.

Owing to pressing business, President M. A. Converse, of the association, was unable to attend, and Red Lake Falls was represented by F. A. Grady and Fred Borchers.

After the meeting the Crookston Fire department gave a banquet for the delegates in attendance at which the city officials and members of the local fire department were present.

After the banqueting tables had been cleared away Chief Morris welcomed the visiting delegates, and assured the members from Red Lake Falls, where the next tournament will be held, that Crookston would do her part in making it a success. He then called on Mayor McPhee, who also welcomed the delegates and paid a glowing tribute to the Crookston Volunteer department.

F. A. Grady of Red Lake Falls, chairman of the executive committee, was then called upon and he thanked the Crookston department for their welcome, for the entertainment provided and for the help which they promised. He told several interesting incidents which had happened at Red Lake Falls during his service as a firefighter, the most touching of which was the death of the Martell family which happened some years ago. He concluded by extending a hearty invitation to the Crookston department and Crookston citizens generally to attend the next tournament at Red Lake Falls.

It is now up to the citizens of Red Lake Falls to make the tournament a success.

INDIANS RECEIVE MONEY.

Earl W. Allen, the new agent at the Red Lake reservation, made a payment due the Indians on the diminished reservation last week.

The money which was available for this payment amounted to some $35,000, but the actual payment made was $21,240. There are 800 adult Indian members of the Red Lake band who were entitled to a share in the money due.

All of these received $26.50 each. Every minor Indian under the age of 18 years who is a member of the Red Lake band, is also entitled to a like sum, but the money is held in trust by the government for these minors until they come of age.

HARD WINTER.

The Passing of the Present Winter Marks One of Suffering and Hardship.

One of the severest winters Minnesota has experienced in ten years is passing into history, and while "spring, gentle spring, is not yet in our midst," as say the poets, the forerunners of this always welcome season have arrived. The damage and suffering of the long cold spell and heavy fall of snow will be greater when warm weather melts the snow and reveals the extent of the loss. Thousands of cattle all over the Northwest have been either frozen or starved to death by the elements and should a prolonged warm spell set in the damage from floods will be almost as great as that done by the extreme cold. Those who had no cattle to lose or who are in no danger from floods suffered also, feeling the winter keenly in other ways. The fuel shortage and higher prices of the commodity when it could be obtained made many undergo suffering and privations, while prices of eggs, potatoes, flour and other necessaries of life went skywards with the price of fuel. All through, the winter has been a hard one for all and the "gentle zephyrs" of spring will be welcome indeed to the cold and snowbound Northwest.

THIS IS WORTH SAVING.

The following simple home-made mixture is said to relieve any form of rheumatism or backache, also cleanse and strenghten the Kidneys and bladder, overcoming all urinary disorders, Bright's disease: Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Mix by shaking well in a bottle and take in teaspoonful doses after meals and at bedtime.

A well known authoritie states that these ingredients are mainly of vegetable extraction, and harmless to use, and can be obtained at small cost from any good prescription pharmacy. Those who think they have kidney trouble or suffer with a lame back or weak bladder or rheumatism, should give this prescription a trial, as no harm can possibly follow its use, and it is said to do wonders for some people.

SENT TO ASYLUM.

Jim Nelson of Lake Pleastnt Taken to Fergus Falls Last Monday.

Jim Nelson, a farmer living at Lake Pleasant was before Judge Tarrant for examination as to his sanity and was committed to the asylum at Fergus Falls. His condition was pitiable in the extreme. He displayed a great dislike for big men, and when they were around he would spit at them, as if trying to get a bad taste out of his mouth. Mr. Nelson is married and father of two children, which makes the case the most sorrowful that has ever occurred in Red Lake county. Financial troubles are supposed to have been the cause of his misfortune.

Sheriff Nelson and Joseph Belair took the man to Fergus Falls.

FARMER LOSES LEG.

Ole Opgrand, a farmer whose home is near Dorothy on the abandoned line between Crookston and Wylie, is lying in the hospital at Warren in a critical condition as the result of an accident Feb. 11. He had been to Crookston and was returning home on the train by way of south Euclid. In jumping from the train he fell between the wheels and had his left leg severed below the knee. The train crew placed him on the train again and took him to the hospital at Warren. He is about fifty years of age and is well known all over the western part of Red Lake county.

PIONEER PASSES AWAY.

John Woodcock, a well known resident of Thief River Falls died at the hospital in that city Sunday morning of kidney trouble following an operation for appendicitis which he underwent some ten days ago.

Constipation

Baked sweet apples, with some people, bring prompt relief for Constipation. With others, coarse all-wheat bread will have the same effect. Nature undoubtedly has a vegetable remedy to relieve every ailment known to man, if physicians can but find Nature's way to health. And this is strikingly true with regard to Constipation.

The bark of a certain tree in California—Cascara Sagrada—offers a most excellent aid to this end. But, combined with Egyptian Senna, Slippery Elm Bark, Solid Extract of Prunes, etc., this same Cascara bark is given its greatest possible power to correct constipation. A toothsome Candy Tablet, called Lax-ets, is now made at the Dr. Shoop Laboratories, from this ingenuous and most effective prescription. Its effect on Constipation, Billiousness, Sour Stomach, Bad Breath, Sallow Complexion, etc., is indeed prompt and satisfying.

No griping, no unpleasant after effects are experienced, and Lax-ets are put up in beautiful lithographed metal boxes at 5 cents and 25 cents per box.

SUDDEN HALT IN THE THAW TRIAL

ANOTHER TRAGIC CHAPTER IN HISTORY OF THAW-WHITE EPISODE.

WIFE OF JUROR PASSES AWAY

CASE ADJOURNED UNTIL MONDAY —MUCH DEPENDS ON AFFLICTED JUROR.

New York, Feb. 16.—Another tragic chapter in the history of the Thaw-White episode was written yesterday when grim Death stepped in to halt the famous trial in its fourth week. The wife of Juror No. 11, Mrs. Joseph B. Bolton, passed away yesterday afternoon, soon after her husband had reached her bedside. He had been summoned from the court room where the trial had been in progress for less than fifteen minutes. The formal announcement of Mrs. Bolton's death was made in court shortly after 2 p. m., the hour set for the afternoon session, and Justice Fitzgerald immediately ordered an adjournment of the case until next Monday morning. The court also ordered, with the consent of counsel, that the other eleven jurymen be given their liberty and no longer be held together. He admonished the jurors to be guided by their honesty and their oaths and not to read the newspapers or discuss the Thaw case with anybody.

Depends on Bereaved Juror.

In announcing the adjournment until Monday Justice Fitzgerald expressed the hope that the trial might then proceed. It is realized, however, that this will depend largely upon the condition in which Juror Bolton may be at that time. If he feels that he can put aside all personal considerations and continue to act as a juror the trial will be resumed. If he feels that his condition of mind is such, or that his personal affairs are such as to prevent his giving his whole attention to the case during the remaining days of the trial some other solution of the difficulty must be looked for.

New Haven, Conn., Feb. 16.—Before the Connecticut Association of Arts and Sciences, Prof. Addison Verrill of Yale said last night:

SULPHUR MATCHES KILL FOUR.

First-class Passengers of Swedish Steamer Meet Peculiar Death.

Antwerp, Feb. 13. — Four first-class passengers of the Swedish steamship Olof Wijk, which arrived here yesterday from Gottenberg, were found suffocated in their state rooms. Their deaths were due to fumes which escaped from a quantity of sulphur matches stored in the hold directly beneath their state rooms.

MADDEN MERCILESSLY FLAYED

EDITORS ROAST ASSISTANT POST MASTER GENERAL — BRYAN IS HEARD.

St. Paul, Feb. 16.—Two special features marked the opening day of the Minnesota Editorial association's forty-first annual meeting, which convened at the Ryan hotel. One was the appearance at the morning session of William Jennings Bryan, who delivered an address on "The Country Editor." The second was the merciless flaying of Third Assistant Postmaster General Madden by the association in the afternoon.

Mr. Bryan was enthusiastically received. He declared that the political power in years to come rests with the country editors, as the city papers no longer have the prestige they once had.

"The daily papers are becoming more and more business enterprises," said Mr. Bryan, "and less political factors, because no one man has enough to own a great city daily, and if he did he wouldn't know enough to edit it. That is, if he had the business sense to accumulate a large amount of money he would not have had the proper newspaper training to manage the editorial end. So the big daily is edited by hired men, and the man who is hired to write editorials cannot do his duty to the community."

The attack on Mr. Madden was brought about by the proposed postal law, for which he is said to be responsible, and under which country newspapers with "patent" insides are not to be classed as second-class matter.

SLUGGED BY WRENCH.

Man Narrowly Escapes Death When Machine Starts.

Eau Claire, Wis., Feb. 16.—While repairing a barking machine at the mill of the Dells Paper and Pulp company, Edward Smith, a machinist, had a narrow escape from death. As it was he received a serious wound, which cut a bad gash in his head near the temple. He was using a wrench to tighten a nut on one of the large knives of the machine. The machine suddenly started, whirling the wrench about at a rapid rate. Smith was hit upon the head by the heavy iron, which tore through his scalp and struck him a terrific blow upon the bone of the skull, rendering him unconscious. He will recover.

SNOW HIDES FIVE BODIES.

Two Sisters and Man and Two Women Frozen to Death.

Sturgis, S. D., Feb. 16. — Word was received here that Bessie Selm, aged thirty, and a sister aged twelve, lost in the recent blizzard near Selm, froze to death. Forty people have been out for six days searching, and no trace was found. The girls went from their home to visit a brother. It is supposed the bodies are covered with snow.

Two women and one man, homesteaders, also are reported frozen to death at the same time some distance north of Selm.

BABY'S PAPA AGED 87.

Aged Colored Man "Wears a Smile"—It's a Girl.

Albia, Iowa, Feb. 16. — This city claims the distinction of having the oldest father of any town in the state. Such a claim is made since this morning, when a baby girl was born to Mr. and Mrs. John Hayes, a colored couple, who reside in the west part of town. The father recently celebrated his eighty-seventh birthday. The mother is many years younger.

St. Paul, Feb. 8.—Senator Cushman introduced a bill which establishes the Iowa rate basis on all classes of commodities and prevents the railroads from making lower rates between competing points than between local points. In cases where the Minnesota roads carry lower rates, as they do for the short distances, these lower rates will govern. The bill gives the railroad and warehouse commission jurisdiction over bridge corporations over whose bridges railroads pass. The railroad commission has power to change rates, but may not make them higher.

NEW WEATHER BUREAU.

Senate Authorizes Donation of Acre as Site at Farm School.

After letting the matter rest two years, the government has come forward again with a proposition to establish a weather office at the state agricultural school in St. Anthony Park. The state has been asked to give the government an acre of land at the farm school, upon which a building for the weather bureau will be established, and a bill authorizing the board of regents of the university to deed the land was passed by the senate under suspension of the rules.

The bill, which was introduced by Senator J. M. Hackney of St. Paul, simply gives the regents the authority to deed one acre, which is located a short distance from the main building at the college, the land to be used for the purpose of erecting a building for the weather bureau or for agricultural purposes.

The government made a similar proposal two years ago, but owing to strong opposition to the project on the part of Minneapolis it was dropped. The intention was to consolidate the St. Paul and Minneapolis weather offices and make the one located at the farm school the headquarters for the Northwest. Economy in the conduct of the business in this section was the reason urged for the move, but it was dropped for the time being. It seems, however, that the weather department did not give up the idea and took this occasion, when the legislature is in session, to secure the land necessary for the erection of the building, which will be equipped especially for the purposes of the bureau.

Congress has appropriated the money needed for the erection of the building, and is prepared to install the new office some time during the coming summer.

$100,000,000 IN THE FUND.

State School Fund May Reach That Sum With Proper Care.

"The state school fund will eventually have an invested basis of $100,000,000 if the proper care and attention is given to the use of the state mineral lands," was the substance of a talk given by the state auditor at the monthly session of the University Dining club, held at Donaldson's, in Minneapolis. The meeting was presided over by Prof. Samuel B. Green of the state university experiment station. State Inspector of Mines F. A. Wylie and Prof. Bass of the engineering department of the university also spoke, and both supported the measures advocated by the state auditor.

The state auditor reviewed the history of the state's control over these lands, and praised specially the policy of his predecessor in refusing to lease the property to small bidders for what would amount to merely nominal sums in return.

Such leasing, he declared would have resulted in losses to the state, particularly to the educational interests.

All the speakers advocated a conservative handling of the state's mineral holdings and declared that attempts to realize immediately on the full value of these properties would be certain to lead to needless losses to the people at large.

FIGHT WITH WILDCAT.

Animal Attacks Woodsman Near Bovey, Minn.

Dolo Grandeovitch, a Hungarian miner, was badly clawed in an encounter he had with a wildcat which attacked him in the woods near Bovey.

Grandeovitch had gone to the woods to cut firewood, and when evening came started for home. As he walked along the trail he was suddenly pounced upon by a wildcat, which knocked him down and severely lacerated him about the body with its sharp claws.

Grandeovitch undoubtedly would have been killed but for the timely arrival of other woodsmen, who chased the cat away.

Head of Seventy-five Banks.

Twenty-five years ago W. S. Wetham left the town of La Grange, Ga., with the munificent sum of $1 in his pocket and landed in New York with nothing to his credit but his clothes and his character. The quality of the former does not matter the quality of the latter has shown itself. He is today president of seventy-five banks, all but four of which are situated in his native state. In return for Georgia's small advance of 100 cents he has pretty well cornered her banking interests and has in keeping a goodly amount of her funds. The four banks of which he is president outside of the state of Georgia are situated in Florida.

"Won't you be glad when the election is over?" queried a gent passenger on a Market street car last evening.

"Not on your life," answered his companion. "Since the campaign opened neother Carrie Nation, Elijah Dowie of Vesuvius have been heard from."

STILL MORE PROOF

That Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Have Cured Even the Most Stubborn Cases of Rheumatism.

"When I was a boy of sixteen," says Mr. Otto H. Rose, a retired grocer, of 1226 Lexington Avenue, Indianapolis, Ind., "I met with a serious accident which injured the bone of my head over the right eye. I recovered from the accident to all appearances, but not many years after I began to have intense pains in the injured bone, which came on every year and would last from a few days to several weeks.

"I consulted the doctors who told me that I was suffering from neuralgia. The sight of my right eye was affected, so that at times I could scarcely see out of it, while both eyes watered constantly. During these attacks I was often dizzy from the terrible pains. The pains came on every morning and passed away in the afternoon. I never suffered from the pain at night.

"I tried without success to get relief until a friend told me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. When I had taken a few boxes I felt the pain growing less intense and in a much shorter time than I had hoped for I was entirely cured. I have recommended the pills to several persons, who have used them with good results.

"My wife uses Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for nervous headaches and finds them the best medicine she has ever used as they give relief where all others fail."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists or sent, postpaid on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

An instructive booklet, entitled "Nervous Disorders," will be sent free on request to anyone interested.

LABOR OF HINDUS IS CHEAP.

They Might Be Employed to Dig the Panama Canal.

"Why not dig the Panama canal with Hindu labor?" an expert upon labor in various lands recently asked. "A number of Punjab Mohammedans, big, sturdy-looking men, have recently arrived in British Columbia in the search for work at wages which to them are high, but which, as we regard them here, are small. They are not wanted by the Canadians, however.

"The Hindu laborer is, as a rule, intelligent and capable and would be well adapted to the climate of Panama. There is a great deal of discontent in India at the present time, owing to the small wages paid to laborers, and they would welcome any opportunity for foreign employment. The average wage there is $3 to $4 a month. In the tea gardens of Assam they can earn but $1.63 to $1.98 a month, the last figures being the amount paid after four years' service.

"It is not surprising, therefore, that large numbers of coolies should leave the country. Indeed, they are leaving in such numbers that the matter is receiving the serious consideration of the Indian government. Many have gone to Natal, where they earn from $30 to $35 a month. From all accounts they are most satisfactory workmen. And another point in their favor is that nowhere, it seems, does the same prejudice exist against them as against Chinese coolies."

GUIDES CHILDREN.

Experience and a Mother's Love Make Advice Valuable.

An Ills. mother writes about feeding children:

"If mothers would use Grape-Nuts more for their little ones, there would be less need for medicines and fewer doctor bills.

"If those suffering from indigestion and stomach troubles would live on Grape-Nuts, toast and good milk for a short period they would experience more than they otherwise would believe.

"Our children have all learned to know the benefit of Grape-Nuts as an appetizing, strengthening food. It is every evening, with few variations, like this: 'Mamma, let's have toast and Grape-Nuts for breakfast; or, let's have eggs and Grape-Nuts'—never forgetting the latter.

"One of our boys in school and 15 years of age repeatedly tells me his mind is so much brighter after having Grape-Nuts as a part if not all his breakfast." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

THE VALUE OF DRAINAGE IS BEING DEMONSTRATED

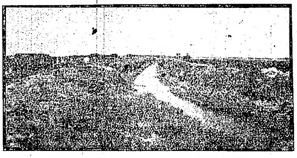
More Than Eighty-eight Miles of Main Ditch Constructed at Cost to State of $80,000.

In an article on drainage in Minnesota, published in the Pioneer Press, Prof. William R. Hoag, engineer to the state drainage commission, shows how land that was condemned as useless swamp has been rendered possible of utilization for agricultural purposes, through the removal of excess of water contained in the soil. Prof. Hoag says in part:

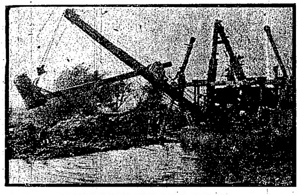
"At a convention held in Crookston in 1886 funds were raised with which to make a topographical survey and plan a complete system of drainage for the whole valley.

"Mr. J. T. Fanning of Minneapolis was given general charge of the work and his report showed that about 275 miles of main ditches would be needed. He estimated their cost at $750,000. Unsuccessful attempts were made with the legislatures of 1887, 1889 and 1891 for state aid to carry out this great public work. Mr. Hill showed his faith in the project by contributing at the start $25,000 with which to make a beginning.

"In 1893 legislative approval was gained, a commission was created and given $100,000 with which to begin the work. Later appropriations enabled the commission, under the wise and efficient administration of the late Ezra G. Valentine of Breckenridge, its president, and O. H. Hoffman of Minneapolis, its engineer, to construct 125 miles of main ditch. These ditches, varying in length from three to thirteen miles, were located where the greatest damage from overflow was occurring, from Kittson county on the north to Traverse county on the south. The Sand Hill River ditch, in Polk county, was the largest of the system, costing more than $22,000 and requiring the moving of over 200,000 cubic yards of earth. The material taken from this one ditch would make a road grade two feet high and sixteen feet wide over thirty-three miles in length. This ditch when running full carries 320,000 gallons per minute. At this rate the water falling upon one square mile in an ordinary rain lasting twenty-four hours would be carried away in less than one hour.



EMMONS DITCH, FREEBORN COUNTY, MINN.,
F. H. Fisk, Engineer.



NELSON DITCH, FARIBAULT COUNTY,
F. H. Fisk, Engineer.

"The last of these Red river state ditches was dug in 1898, being the Middle River ditch in Marshall county.

"In 1897 the legislature created a commission called the state drainage commission to care for the repair of the whole system. The writer was appointed engineer of the board and has made annual inspections of the system to date.

"The report of the inspections from year to year showed that most of the ditches were maintaining their original capacity; some were increasing while a few were gradually filling up, a process not unusual nor unexpected where the slope was small and where the water from a sandy loam soil, carrying more or less fine sand, was discharged into the ditch.

Counties Make Urgent Repairs.

"The most needed repairs, as recommended by the inspecting commission, have been made by the counties receiving the benefits. Six of the ditches after the first few years of their working, became much reduced in their carrying capacity by the gradual accumulation of sand in the bottom, especially along the lower course, and the coulee into which they emptied. The commission reported the condition of these ditches and estimated that $20,000 would be required to fully restore them and to make a two-mile extension to one large ditch, Felton ditch, in Clay county, and a half-mile extension to the Vega ditch, in Marshall county; these two being the most in need of an enlarged outlet and requiring more than half of the $20,000 estimated for the whole improvement.

"Only $7,000 having been made available for this work, an effort was made to have the several interested counties join with the state and share the expense of making the needed repairs and extensions. This plan, however failed, and the commission apportioned the $7,000 among six ditches, making extensions to each varying from a quarter to a half-mile in length. These extensions now have been in service two seasons, and an inspection marked change in the efficiency of these ditches. The Rabbit river ditch in Traverse county, the Whisky creek in Clay county and the Borup ditch in Norman county, show the greatest improvement.

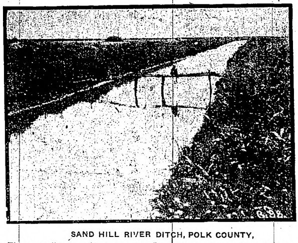
"The benefits attending all this earlier work on the part of the state have been two-fold. The first and that for which they were dug was an immediate physical benefit. On this point good testimony appears in the 'Report of the Board of Drainage Commissioners' for the year ending Dec. 31, 1901. On page 23 the inspection engineer says:

"'The immediate results of drainage has forced itself upon the attention of your engineer by the remarkable change coming to the farms situated within the influence of the ditches. Your engineer has traveled by team over dry land along many of the ditches during the present inspection, where three years before he was obliged to travel on foot, and that, too, with high-topped rubber boots. During the same period he has noted swamps transformed into splendid grass land; grass land, too wet to warrant cutting, becoming the best of meadow land, and wet meadow land joining the area for the production of the justly celebrated "No. 1 hard." Indeed, the valley furnishes not a few examples of land along the ditches where this whole range, from peat bog and swamp to highly cultivated fields, has taken place under the eye of your engineer during the time of his five annual inspection tours.'

"The second result of these pioneer ditches, and perhaps the most potent and far-reaching, was of an educational nature. Each ditch became at once a great object lesson; a great physical demonstration. One of the larger state ditches could bring no physical benefit to a farm outside of its drainage area, but it soon began to wield an influence as far as men traveled who had seen its work of reclamation.

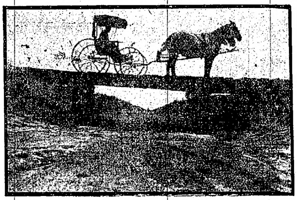
Legislature Is Convinced.

"With these proofs of the value and feasibility of drainage in Northern Minnesota the legislature could not refuse additional aid for the work. The legislature of 1900-01 created the drainage commission of the State of Minnesota and gave it $25,000 a year with which to continue the drainage work. The last legislature made the same appropriation. Mr. George A. Ralph of Crookston is the engineer of the commission, and his report, submitted in December, 1904, shows that more than eighty-eight miles (twenty-two ditches, scattered in fourteen counties) of main ditch had been constructed, involving nearly 600,000 cubic yards of earthwork, at a cost to the state of about $60,000. The estimated benefits coming to the state lands from this expenditure is over $129,000, and to private lands over $240,000.



SAND HILL RIVER DITCH, POLK COUNTY,
Thirteen miles long, it exerts a beneficial influence over at least 50,000 acres.

"Perhaps the best proof we have of the educational value of drainage work in Minnesota is a general statement so favorable to still more vigorous and liberal policy for state drainage that the friends of drainage in the last legislature had little difficulty in passing a bill carrying a $14,000 appropriation to enable a systematic survey of Northern Minnesota to be made, looking to a comprehensive system of drainage for the whole territory. This topographical survey has been in progress during the last two years, under the direction of Mr. John Abercrombie, and later Mr. George A. Ralph, with the assurance that the present legislature will have a report upon which to base a plan for still greater undertakings for drainage.



KENNEDY DITCH, KITTSON COUNTY.

"The state ditches are but a part of the main ditches needed in any county to furnish adequate outlet for its excess storm water, and the counties are rapidly supplying the additional ditches needed. Not a county in which the state gave a practicable demonstration of the benefits attending adequate drainage but has spent from two to ten times as much in helping itself to still greater benefits.

"If there is an exception to the above statement it is in some county in which the state has been more recently at work; where the benefits have not yet had time to fully develop or where the small amount of land under cultivation would not justify the organization of the drainage area into a district for the purpose of constructing a ditch. In all county ditch systems the benefited lands must meet the expense of constructing the ditch and building the necessary bridges. But all of these hundred of miles of state and county ditches are but the arteries of the general system. The people have taken up the work at this point and have added thousands of miles of private ditches and farm drains and splendid road ditches which gather the surplus water from their flat fields and meadows and deliver it to a state or county ditch through which it reaches the Red river on its journey to the North."

SHOW NEW COUNTY IS LEGAL.

Judge McClannahan of the district court at Grand Rapids has issued an order to the commissioners of Koochiching county to appear before him at Brainerd and show by what authority they are holding their offices and maintaining a county government and "to abide by the results" of the hearing. The petition upon which this order was issued is made by F. E. Reuswig, director of School District No. 1. The members of the school board have doubts as to the legality of the proceedings creating Koochiching county, and as the district has much at stake, having thirty schools now in operation in the territory involved, and being constantly asked to open new schools, so that much confusion and uncertainty was occasioned, they reached the determination to test the legality of the status of the new county, and the present proceedings are the first step in that direction.

RECALLS CAMPAIGN OF '60.

Butt of the Douglas Liberty Pole Dug Up at St. Peter.

A relic of one of the most bitterly contested presidential campaigns in the history of American politics, that of 1860, was found, when workmen engaged in constructing St. Peter's new sewerage system, uncovered the butt of the Stephen A. Douglas liberty pole. It was taken out at the intersection of Minnesota avenue and Mulberry street, and was not greatly decayed.

While the campaign was in progress three of these poles were erected on St. Peter's principal street. One was put in place by the admirers of John C. Breckenridge, the nominee of the Southern wing of the Democracy; another by the adherents of Abraham Lincoln, and a third by the Douglas faction. Repeated efforts were made to destroy the offending emblems, and all had to be jealously guarded.

On one occasion the Lincoln men secured a brass cannon and held a monster rally. When the excitement was at fever pitch an attempt was made to burn Douglas in effigy, but the supporters of the "little giant" rushed to the rescue and a pitched battle followed. In the melee several men were more or less seriously injured, and when hostilities had subsided it was found the Lincoln cannon had disappeared.

Fifteen years later the fieldpiece was found at the bottom of an unused well, and it is still in commission, being used every time St. Peter elects a new governor.

All the justices of the United States supreme court except William H. Moody, the youngest member, are gray haired. Mr. Moody is a blond and his hair is of that pale straw color which turns gray only very late in life. His ruddy complexion gives an additional touch of youthfulness, so that the contrast between Mr. Moody and other members of the court is striking.

An Angry Dowager Empress.

A correspondent writing from Peking says that the empress dowager, learning that her imperial edict issued several years ago calling upon Chinese fathers and mothers to stop the custom of binding their daughters' feet was not being obeyed as universally as a special imperial edict ought to be, evinced considerable ire at the news, with the result that several grand councillors who were present at the time underwent a disagreeable quarter of an hour at her majesty's hands.

Oldest Bank Notes.

The oldest bank notes in the world are the "flying money" or convenient money, first issued in China in 2697 B. C. One writer tells that the ancient Chinese bank notes were in many respects similar to those of the present day, bearing the name of the note, the signature of the official who issued it and its value, in both figures and words. On the top of these curious notes was the following injunction: "Produce all you can; spend with economy."

ANOTHER BRYAN IDEA.

W. J. Bryan was the principal speaker before the Minnesota Editorial Association at St. Paul last week and made an address of some length. Mr. Bryan says the country weekly should be preferred to the city daily as a party organ, as the big dailies of the country are becoming business undertakings and no longer have any editorial prestige.

Mr. Bryan pays a rather broad compliment to the country editors in this remark.

Had all country editors the force and ability that Mr. Bryan has, his contention would be good. But how many can handle a political question of national interest in a way to convince their readers of their side of the question?

Would not the average country editor have to accept "ready-made" editorials from such literary lights as Mr. Bryan in order to have as clever an editorial page as his more gifted brother?

Mr. Bryan's idea may be all right as far as Mr. Bryan is concerned, but for the man whose knowledge of national politics must come from reading, rather than experience, the idea is not so rosy.

The morbid interest taken by the public in the immoral testimony of the Thaw trial is another indication of the truth of the saying that immorality increases with the population. Every newspaper that enters the home should be carefully censored by parents to prevent their children reading such accounts, not only of the Thaw trial, but all cases of a similar nature.

Two weekly papers in McLeod County have discontinued, having consolidated with other papers. The country weeklies in this state are too numerous for the number of people there is to support them and making two into one is the only way to get a fair living out of the weekly newspaper business now.

Congressman Halvor Steenerson, who represents this district in Washington, is receiving a large amount of publicity in the press all over the United States for his prominence in reform legislation, notably the active part taken in the bill to reduce the mail rates now charged the government by the railroads.

Rumor says that Bob Dunn will again be a candidate for the Republican nomination for governor. Bob, it seems, is far from being a member of the "down and out club."

Minneapolis reports a shortage of shingles. Perhaps the "boys" take one off the roof occasionally.

To stop a Cold with "Preventics" is safer than to let it run and cure it afterwards. Taken at the "sneeze stage" Preventics will head off all colds and grippe, and perhaps save you from Pneumonia or Bronchitis. Preventics are little toothsome candy cold cure tablets selling in 5-cent and 25-cent boxes If you are chill, if you begin to sneeze, try Preventics. Sold by all dealers.

Shifting Responsibility.

The dishonorable discharge of a battalion of United States soldiers for the crimes of a few of their comrades seems to be a method of shifting responsibility from the officers in charge of the troops to the shoulders of those who, whatever their shortcomings, possess in the highest degree that fidelity to the corps which in the long run makes the efficient man at arms. Officers of battalions and companies are supposed to keep their men in hand at all times, and the more they are prone to wild conduct when idling around camp the more alert their commanders should be. The wholesale disgrace of innocent members of the Twenty-fifth regiment because they refused to tell on their comrades is a most unfortunate affair for the whole army as well as for the victims of the drastic discipline.

To be suddenly deprived of a good army record, won by years of service, is a calamity which none but soldiers can fully understand. For what a soldier must endure the pay, however liberal, is but scant return. He longs to even up with a record of "good soldier" on his descriptive list and a certificate of honorable discharge on a parchment bearing the eagle. Another feature of the service is peculiar. A soldier takes his place in a little family of 80 or 100 men and from the very start is taught that he must stand by his comrades in camp as well as in battle. He must never tell tales, never seek the advantage for himself, never shirk any duty common to the crowd. He must so conduct himself that he can stand face to face daily with about the same men year after year. He will openly denounce and even shoot down the comrade who betrays the flag, but the traitor to company traditions he will rebuke in private to save feelings and avoid scandal. Rarely does this pride in the company work against the good of the service. On the contrary, it prunes down the angles of the individual and makes for solidarity where the alternative is a mere mob. For this reason the true soldier will prefer legal punishment and disgrace to "squealing" on a comrade and blackening the fame of the company in which he has won his honors. It is a most unusual circumstance that a crisis should arise in the army making it appear necessary, in the interest of military discipline, to give to this sort of fidelity the color of criminality.

Adding Fuel to the Fire.

Germany has on a press campaign against women's finery and will expose and ridicule certain aggravated cases of extravagance in dress. The muck rake will make the whole world its field, and the swell set of New York and Chicago will be pilloried, along with the spendthrifts of London, Paris and Berlin.

A novel feature of this scandalous exhibit will be the comparison in figures of brilliant costumes or particular articles of dress worn on fete occasions with the number of breakfasts they represent. Some attention will also be given to extravagances at table, especially at social functions where the gay plumage is displayed. The editor will probably find out very soon that instead of curing the mischief by publicity the chronicle of how the fashionables of the great capitals of the world spend their money may stir up new cravings for notoriety. Much of the existing extravagance is due to envy and emulation. Some people spend money simply to keep up with the procession they want to figure in.

A writer in the current Reader says that the people of Brazil like the Americans better than they do the Germans and English. They like our way of doing things and openly express a wish to follow our example. Perhaps it will be the case of Prussia and the lesser German states over again, except that the United States will head an American federation of republics and not an empire of dependent sovereignties.

LA GRIPPE.

An ache in the back and a pain in the head—
That's the grippe!
A choke in the throat, and a yearning for bed—
That's the grippe!
A river of heat, then a shiver of cold,
A feeling of being three hundred years old,
A willingness even to do as you're told—
That's the grippe!

An arrow of pain, now in this place, now in that—
That's the grippe!
A feeling of doubt as to where you are at—
That's the grippe!
A stupid sensation—of course, wholly new!—
A foolish depression!—why should you feel blue?—
A doubt as to whether this is really you—
That's the grippe!

Strange visions at night, that deprive you of rest—
That's the grippe!
A taste in your mouth and a weight on your chest—
That's the grippe!
A tired sensation that runs through your veins—
A queer combination of aches and of pains,
A vapid admission of absence of brains—
That's the grippe!

PLEA FOR FORESTRY.

Plans Advanced to the Legislature to Make Itasca Park an Experimental Forest.

The Minnesota Forestry Association has plans to submit to the present session of the legislature to educate young men in the practice of forestry aims to use parts of Itasca park as an experimental ground. F. B. Williams, secretary of the association says:

The present condition of the forestry problem shows the very general desire on the part of thinking men to put this source of wealth on a practical, helpful basis. This desire, however, is largely undirected and it is important to unite all friends of forestry for that which can best be undertaken at this time.

More has been done for agriculture by systematic agricultural education of the young men than in any other way, and undoubtedly we can do most for forestry in a similar way.

We have an enormous area in Minnesota especially adapted for forests and another large area which will not be needed for agriculture for a long time. The cut-over lands of Minnesota are today almost unproductive.

Our people do not know the great benefits that would come to them from the practice of scientific forestry, and it is not necessary here to recite them, but it should be better known that the annual income from our forests and manufactured products amounts to $40,000,000 per year, and yet we are doing nothing to show how this great source of wealth can be maintained.

What Minnesota needs just now is a more specific idea as to the possibilities of forestry. The course of study in forestry in the University needs a demonstration forest in order to put the forestry instruction there on a practical, helpful basis, and this should be provided at the present session of the legislature.

It is a fortunate coincidence that the state has in Itasca Park a tract of land in every way adapted for this purpose, which would be improved, even from the park standpoint, by being used for demonstration work in forestry, and the park really needs attentions of this kind to preserve its beauties and make it more valurble.

Governor Johnson has recommended that the park be turned over to the State Forestry Board, which is in line with its proposed use for demonstration work. In addition to experiments in general forestry, experiments would be made there with the wood of our quick growing trees, such as cottonwood, willow and soft maple, to make them more durable in the soil and more valuable for construction purposes. It is believed that cottonwood can be made to last eight or ten years as fence-posts by proper treatment.

L. R. Cowles, Portland, Ore., was troubled with constipation since childhood and had to use medicine continually to move his bowels. He was in very bad shape. Here is what he says after using one bottle of Dr. Adler's Treatment: "I think your medicine is a wonder. I never felt or looked so well as I do now. Although I am a telegraph operator and work nights, I have gained 10 pounds in the last month." Large dollar bottles at W. A. Schrieter's.

BOARD RECEIVES PETITION.

A petition headed by Joseph Johnson of Erie has been sent in requesting the board of county commissioners to organize township 153 range 39. Mr. Johnson suggests to the board that the new township if organized be named Zenith, which by the way is not so bad. If this town is organized it will leave only two unorganized townships in Red Lake county.

PORTABLE VILLAGES.

Turcomans Move Their Houses From Place to Place.

The Turcomans, who live on the eastern shore of the Caspian sea, carry their villages about with them when they travel. As a tribe sets out on a journey every man packs his wooden house upon a camel, which the animal can easily carry, and when a spot is reached where he and his friends intend to remain for any great length of time the camels are unloaded and a village started which it takes about an hour or so to build.

It is to be remembered that the houses are real houses and not tents and that the settlement is not a camp, but a village. The traveling house of the Turcoman is a marvel of skill and ingenuity and is really much lighter, more portable and can be packed into a much smaller compass than any of the so called portable houses that are manufactured and sold in some parts of our country.

The frame is made of strong, light wood laths about an inch broad by three-quarters of an inch thick, crossing each other when set up in position at right angles about a foot apart and fastened at each crossing by the thongs of rawhide so as to be movable, and the whole framework may be opened or shut in the same manner as those toys for children that consist of a squad of wooden soldiers and will expand or close at will so as to form open or close columns.

One part or more made in this way and all inclosing a circle fifteen or twenty feet across form the skeleton of the walls and are firmly secured in place by bands of ropes made of hair or wool fastened round the end of each rod. From the upper ends of these rods similar rods bent near the wall and into something less than a right angle are so disposed that the longer portions slope to the center and, being tied with rope, form the roof.

Over this is thrown a covering of black felt, having in the center a large hole which answers both for a window and a chimney. Large pieces of the same coarse black felt are wrapped round the walls, and outside these, to keep all tight, is bound another frame of split reeds or canes or of some very light, tough wood bound closely together with strong cords.

When Making Fast the Flag Halyards

"Many a slender flagpole has been ruined," said a rigger, "by drawing the halyards down too snugly when making them fast after hauling down the flag. If this is done in dry weather and it comes on wet, the shrinking of the halyards thus drawn taut to start with may be enough to bend the pole, and if it should be left in that way long enough the pole would be permanently bent. Flag halyards when no flag is flying should be made fast with a little slack."

With a Home.

The great millionaire looked up impatiently.

"Well," he said, "what is it?"

"I desire, sir," the young man faltered, "to marry your daughter, provided"—

The other frowned.

"Provided what?"

"Just provided," murmured the youth.

Vocabularies.

The English language, according to a German statistician who has made a study of the comparative wealth of languages, heads the list with the enormous vocabulary of 260,000 words; German comes next, with 80,000 words; then Italian, with 75,000; French, 30,000; Turkish, 22,500, and Spanish, 20,000.

THE APACHES.

This Tribe Holds the Record as Bad Indians.

Scarcely a tribe of our American Indians but what have engraved their record of crime and infamy high up on history's wall, yet above them all is the Apaches'.

From 1540 to 1853 New Spain and Mexico carried on a so called warfare with these people. The Apaches were vastly outnumbered by the Mexican soldiery, but what they lacked in numbers was more than made up in courage and craftiness. The Apache ever had a thorough contempt for the Mexican soldier, and in later years, when they were fighting with firearms as well as arrows, they would not waste cartridges on the Mexicans, but would kill them with arrows, spears and stones, saving their cartridges for other and more worthy foes.

When this southwest region became a part of the United States the Apaches were a serious problem with which we had to contend. Our government vacillated between a simpering peace policy and the other extreme, their extermination.

Their zone of wandering being intersected by the international boundary line further complicated matters. They would raid down into Mexico and then rush back with the plunder to our side of the line, out of reach of the pursuing soldiers. Next it would be a raid on the Arizona side and a flight into the wild mountains of Sonora. The Mexican government attempted to assist their miserable army by giving a scalp bounty, and for years they paid out their gold coin for Apache scalps. Scalp hunting became a recognized industry. The horror of this was that to the Mexican official all scalps looked alike, whether from the head of a hostile or a friendly Indian. The price was $100 for a man, $50 for a woman and $25 for a child. It is small wonder that the tribe sank deeper into savagery than ever when we stop to think that the men knew there was a price set on the scalps of their wives and children, and there was a horde of human fiends, white in color, but more savage than the savage himself, who were hunting them as they would a cougar of the mountains.—E. S. Curtis in Scribner's.

QUICKER THAN LIGHTNING.

Action of the Human Body Outstrips Everything In Motion.

"As quick as lightning" is a phrase colloquially used to express the maximum of rapidity, but, according to a well known scientist, electricity itself is outstripped by that old fashioned machine, the human body, by which it appears powers can, so to speak, be generated in the brain, transmitted through the nerves and developed in the muscles in an infinitesimal fraction of a second.

It is stated that a pianist in playing a presto of Mendelssohn played 5,595 notes in four minutes and three seconds. The striking of each of these, it has been estimated, involved two movements of the finger and possibly more.

Again, the movements of the wrist, elbows and arms can scarcely be less than one movement for each note. As twenty-four notes were played each second and each involves three movements we would have seventy-two voluntary movements per second.

Again, the place, the force, the time and the duration of each of these movements were controlled. All these motor reactions were conditioned upon a knowledge of the position of each finger of each hand before it was moved, while moving it, as well as of the auditory effect to force and pitch, all of which involves equally rapid sensory transmissions.

If we add to this the work of the memory in placing the notes in their proper position as well as the fact that the performer at the same time participates in the emotion the selection describes and feels the strength and weaknesses of the performance, we arrive at a truly bewildering network of impulses coursing along at inconceivably rapid rates.

Such estimates show, too, that we are capable of doing many things at once. The mind is not a unit, but is composed of higher and lower centers, the available fund of attention being distributed among them.—Pearson's Weekly.

Legend and Reality.

Legend tells how Napoleon, while Moscow was in flames, found time to draw up a decree organizing the Theatre Francais. Alas, the story is not true. Napoleon was in Poland when he received the decree ready to be signed. He there signed it and sent it back to Paris, but in the margin wrote the following: "To be forwarded when the army will be at Moscow. It is his majesty's intention that the decree should be dated from that town."

Obedience.

Every duty, even the least duty, involves the whole principle of obedience. And little duties make the will dutiful—that is, supple and prompt to obey. Little obediences lead into great. The daily round of duty is full of probation and of discipline. It trains the will, heart and conscience.—Woman's Life.

IF there is a time of the year when good Shoes are needed, this is surely the time. A little thawing in daytime freezing at night makes the ice or ground sharp and cutting. You will find our shoes built expressly for these conditions.

Our Sharood's R-E-Z Men's Shoes with Pneumatic Soles are positively the best shoes made. This is a broad assertion, but it can be proven. They show the style, so much sought for these days, and above all the quality. Many Eastern made shoes are very stylish, some freakish, but they have no wearing qualities.

We have so much faith in our line of R-E-Z Shoes that we will sell you a pair with the broadest guarantee. If not satisfied with the shoes in every particular bring them back. The price is $5.00. May seem a little high to some, but when you consider the quality they are cheap. The length of time a shoe wears is what makes the price of a shoe. A few years ago $3.50 seemed high for a shoe. Today nobody thinks of buying a shoe that costs less than that.

We have them in Box Calf or Kid. The calf shoe is leather lined, rubber heeled, bellows tongued, pneumatic soles, absolutely waterproof—enough, perhaps too much, said. Come and look at the shoes. They are more eloquent than we.

What Sharood Shoes are for men St. Cecelia Shoes are for women. The best that Rochester, N. Y., the seat of fine shoe making in the United States, produces.

Godman Shoes at $1.50 to $2.50 are the best cheap but good wearing shoes made. They will not disappoint you. Try them for yourself and children.

CANADA'S GOOD TIMES.

The Immigration During 1906 Was 216,000.

While it is well to heed every word of caution from the leaders in commerce and finance and to avoid all speculative ventures that lack a solid business foundation, it is clearly evident that there is no conspicuous weak spot in Canada's present era of prosperity. The Toronto Globe says: "The Dominion has in a commercial sense plenty of money, and our leading financial institutions are in a position to lend freely in the United States. The chief productive enterprises of Canada are not buoyed up by an era of dangerous speculation, but are following substantial business methods and finding safe and continuous markets for their goods. We are not bolstering up any industries by extensive export bonuses that must impoverish the people as a whole, and ultimately lead to collapse through the failure of the artificial aid. There is no extreme protection in Canada such as would create great fortunes for a few at the expense of the general public and lead to disruption and catastrophe. The prosperity of Canada has no artificial foundation being based on a healthy and substantial expansion of trade and industry, with a proportionate extension of productive settlement to new areas.

It is true that we are borrowing extensively for railway construction, but every line will bring new territory within the limits of profitable occupation, and will create prosperous settlements to bear the burdens and repay the outlay. We are not exhausting mineral resources, for it is quite reasonable to assume that, although mineral wealth is never permanent, ours will during the measurable future develop a far greater productive capacity than at present. Our timber wealth can be made continuous by a judicious policy. And agriculture, the real foundation of our prosperity, is expanding with every new expenditure on railway construction. We are not in the flush of a railway mania that could bring its punishment through the useless duplication of lines. The gigantic railway enterprises that now stimulate every line of business in Canada will create a new Dominion, and thus render easy the heavy burdens of debt now freely assumed. Canada's era of prosperity has been unprecedented but there is no sign of weakness and no cause for lack of confidence. While our growth is normal and healthy, we need have no alarm at its rapidity." This article might have gone on to relate the great growth that is taking place in Central Canada, where thousands of Americans have made their homes during the past few years. The past calendar year has given to Canada by importation an addition of 216,000 to its population. Of this the United States contributed 63,781. The agents of the Canadian government, whose advertisement appears elsewhere, say that this number will be largely increased during 1907.

CHAPTER II.—(CONTINUED).

But he had not rightfully calculated the extent of his father's hatred. He made himself the evil genius of his disobedient son; and, in consequence, nothing Hubert touched prospered. Mr. Trevlyn destroyed the confidence of his friends in him; he circulated scandalous reports of his wife; he made the public to look with suspicious eyes upon the unfortunate pair, and took the honestly earned bread out of their very mouths. From bad to worse it went on, until, broken in health and spirits, Hubert made an appeal to his father. It was a cold, wet night, and he begged for a little food for his wife and child. They were literally starving! Begged of his own father, and was refused with curses. Not only refused, but kicked like a dog from the door of his childhood's home! There was a fearful storm that night, and Hubert did not come back. All night his young wife sat waiting for him, hushing the feeble cries of the weary infant upon her breast. With the dawn, she muffled herself and child in a shawl and went forth to seek him. Half way from her wretched home to the palatial mansion of Mr. Trevlyn she found her husband, stone dead, and shrouded in the snow—the tender, pitiful snow, that covered him and his wretchedness from sight.

After that, people who knew Mr. Trevlyn said that he grew more fretful and disagreeable. His hair was bleached white as the snow, his hands shook, and his erect frame was bowed and bent like that of a very aged man. His wife, Hubert's mother, pined away to a mere shadow, and before the lapse of a year she was a hopeless idiot.

Helen Trevlyn took up the burden of her life, refusing to despair because of her child. It was a very hard struggle for her, and she lived on, until, as we have seen, when Archer was nine years of age, she died.

When all this was known to Archer Trevlyn he was almost beside himself with passion. If he had possessed the power, he would have wiped the whole Trevlyn race out of existence. He shut himself up in his desolate garret with the tell-tale letters and papers which had belonged to his mother and there, all alone, he took a fearful oath of vengeance. The wrongs of his parents should yet be visited upon the head of the man who had been so cruelly unpitying. He did not know what form his revenge might take, but, so sure as he lived, it should fall some time!

CHAPTER III.

FIVE years passed. Archer was fourteen years of age. He had left the street sweeping business some time before, at the command of Grandma Rugg, and entered a third-class restaurant as an under waiter. It was not the best school in the world for good morals. The people who frequented the Garden Rooms, as they were called, were mostly of a low class, and all the interests and associations surrounding Arch were bad. But perhaps he was not one to be influenced very largely by his surroundings. So the Garden Rooms, if they did not make him better, did not make him worse.

In all these years he had kept the memory of Margie Harrison fresh and green, though he had not seen her since the day his mother died. The remembrance of her beauty and purity kept him oftentimes from sin; and when he felt tempted to give utterance to oaths, her soft eyes seemed to come between him and temptation.

One day he was going across the street to make change for a customer, when a stylish carriage came dashing along. The horses shied at some object, and the pole of the carriage struck Arch and knocked him down. The driver drew in the horses with an imprecation.

Arch picked himself up, and stood recovering his cattered senses, leaning against a lamppost.

"Served ye right!" said the coachman roughly. "You'd no business to be running befront of folkses' carriages."

"Stop!" said a clear voice inside the coach. "What has occurred, Peter?"

"Only a ragged boy knocked down; but he's up again all right. Shall I drive on? You will be late to the concert."

"I shall survive it, if I am," said the voice. "Get down and open the door. I must see if the child is hurt."

"It's no child, miss; it is a boy older than yourself," said the man, surlily obeying the command.

Margie Harrison descended to the pavement. From the sweet voice, Arch had almost expected to see her. A flush of grateful admiration lit up his face. She beamed upon him like a star from the depths of the clouds.

"Are you hurt?" she asked kindly. "It was very careless of Peter to let the carriage strike you. Allow us to take you home."

"Thank you," he said. "I am close to where I work, and I am not hurt. It is only a trifling bruise."

Something familiar about him seemed to strike her; she looked at him with a strangely puzzled face, but he gave her no light.

"Is there nothing we can do for you?" she asked at length.

A great presumption almost took his breath away. He gave it voice on the moment, afraid if he waited he should lose the courage.

"If you will give me the cluster of bluebells in your belt—"

She looked surprised, hesitated a moment, then laid them in his hand. He bowed, and was lost in the crowd.

That night when he got home he found Mat worse. She had been failing for a long time. She was a large girl now, with great, preternaturally bright eyes, and a spot of crimson in each hollow cheek.

It was more than three months since she had been able to do anything, and Grandma Rugg was very harsh and severe with her in consequence. There were black and blue places on her shoulders now where she had been beaten, but Arch did not know it. Mat never spoke to him about her sufferings, because it distressed him so, and made him very angry with the old woman.

He went in and sat down on the straw beside Mat, and before he knew it he was telling her about Margie Harrison. He always brought all his joys and sorrows to Mat now, just as he used to carry them to his mother.

The girl listened intently, the spots on her face growing deeper and wider. She looked at the bluebells wistfully, but would not touch them. Arch offered her a spray. She shook her head sadly.

"No," she said, "they are not for me. Keep them, Arch. Some time, I think, you will be rich and happy, and have all the flowers and beautiful things you wish."

"If I ever am, Mat, you shall be my queen, and dress in gold and silver," answered the boy warmly, "and never do any more heavy work to make your hands hard."

"You are very good, Arch," she said. "I thank you, but I shall not be there, you know. I think I am going away—going where I shall see my mother, and your mother, too, Arch, and where all the world will be full of flowers! Then I shall think of you, Arch, and wish I could send you some."

"Mat, dear Mat! don't talk so strangely!" said the boy, clasping her hot hands in his. "You must not think of going away! What should I do without you?"

She smiled, and touched her lips to his hand, which had stolen under her head, and lay so near her cheek.

"You would forget me, Arch. I mean after a time, and I should want you to. But I love you better than anything else in all the world. And it is better that I should die. A great deal better! Last night I dreamed it was. Your mother came and told me so. Do you know how jealous I have been of that Margie Harrison? I have watched you closely. I have seen you kiss a dead rose that I knew she gave you. And I longed to see her so much, that I have waited around the splendid house where she lives, and seen her time and again come out to ride, with her beautiful dresses, and the white feather in her hat, and the wild roses on her cheeks. And my heart ached with such a hot, bitter pain. But it's all over now, Arch. I am not jealous now. I love her and you—both of you together. If I do go away, I want you to think kindly of me, and——and —good-night, Arch—dear Arch. I am so tired."

He gathered her head to his bosom, and kissed her lips.

Poor little Mat! In the morning, when Arch came down, she had indeed gone away—drifted out with the tide and with the silent night.

After Mat's death the home at Grandma Rugg's became insupportable to Arch. He could not remain there. The old woman was crosser than ever, and though he gave her every penny of his earnings, she was not satisfied.

So Arch took lodgings in another part of the city, quite as poor a place, but there no one had the right to grumble at him. Still, because she was some relation to Mat, he gave Grandma Rugg full half of his money, but he never remained inside her doors longer than necessity demanded.

In his new lodgings he became acquainted with a middle-aged man who represented himself as a retired army officer. His name was John Sharp—a sleek, keen-eyed, smooth-tongued individual, who never boasted or blustered, but who gave people the idea that at some time he had been a person of consequence. This man attached himself particularly to Arch Trevlyn. With insidious cunning he wormed himself into the boy's confidence, and gained, to a certain degree, his friendship. Arch did not trust him entirely, though. There was something about him from which he shrank—the touch of his white, jeweled hand, made his flesh creep, like the touch of a serpent.

But Mr. Sharp had an object to gain, and set himself resolutely to work to carry his point. He made himself necessary to Arch. He bought him books, and taught him in the evenings, when neither were engaged otherwise. He had been well educated, and in Arch he had an apt scholar. Every spare moment of the boy's life was absorbed in his books.

By and by Sharp learned the whole history of th wrongs inflicted on Arch's parents by old Mr. Trevlyn. He snapped at the story as a dog snaps at a bone. But he was cautious and patient, and it was a long time before he showed himself to Arch in his true character. And then, when he did, the revelation had been made so much by degrees, that the boy was hardly shocked to find that his friend was a housebreaker and a highway robber.

Long before he had formed a plan to rob the house of Mr. Trevlyn. It was a field that promised well. Mr. Trevlyn, with the idiosyncrasy of age, had invested most of his fortune in diamonds, and these he kept in a chamber in his house. His chief delight consisted in gloating over these precious stones. Night after night he would sit handling his diamonds, chuckling over his wealth, and threatening imaginary plunderers with destruction.

So, his servants said, and Sharp repeated the story to Arch with sundry variations and alterations suited to the case. He had a persuasive tongue, and it is little wonder that the boy, hating his grandfather as he did, and resolved as he was upon revenging his father's wrongs, should fall into the snare. He wanted Mr. Trevlyn to suffer—he did not care how. If the loss of his diamonds would be to him a severer blow than any other, then let it fall.

Sharp used many specious arguments to induce Arch to become his accomplice in robbing the Trevlyn mansion, but the only one which had any weight was that he could thus revenge his father's wrongs.

"Only assist me, and secure your revenge," said the wily schemer, "and I will share the spoils with you. There will be enough to enrich us both for life."

Arch drew himself up proudly, a fiery red on his cheek, a dangerous gleam in his dark eye.

"I am no thief, sir! I'd scorn to take a cent from that old man to use for my benefit! I would not touch his diamonds if they lay here at my feet. But if I can make him suffer anything like as my poor father suffered through him, then I am ready to turn robber—yes, pickpocket, if you will!" he added savagely.

Sharp appointed the night. His plans were craftily laid. Mr. Trevlyn he had ascertained would be absent on Thursday night; he had taken a little journey into the country for his health, and only the servants and his ward would sleep in the house.

Thursday night was dark and rainy. At midnight Sharp and Arch stood before the house they were to plunder. No thought of shame nor sin entered Archer Trevlyn's heart; he did not seem to think he was about to disgrace himself for life; he thought only of Mr. Trevlyn's dismay when he should return and find the bulk of his riches swept away from him at one blow.

"He took all my father had," he said, under his breath; "he would have sullied the fair fame of my mother, and if I could take from him everything but life, I would do it."

Sharp, with a dexterous skill, removed the fastenings of a shutter, and then the window yielded readily to his touch. He stepped inside; Arch followed. All was quiet, save the heavy ticking of the old clock on the hall stairs. Up the thickly carpeted stairway, along the corridor they passed, and Sharp stopped before a closed door

"We must pass through one room before reaching that where the safe is which contains the treasure," he said, in a whisper. "It is possible that there may be some one sleeping in that room. If so, leave them to me, that is all."

AFTER HER GOLDEN LOCKS.

Miss Martha Panzeram Has a Narrow Escape from a Razor.

A razor, a young lady and a covetous man were the cause of a lot of excitement at the Washington house last night about 7:30 o'clock, says the Nebraska State Journal. The young lady was Miss Martha Panzeram. She was in the kitchen attending to some domestic duties, when she heard a rap on the door. She opened it and a man asked her for a drink of water. She turned to get it for him. The minute her back was turned he made a spring and grabbed her by her hair, which she usually wore braided down her back. He made one swift stroke with a razor, but as she turned partly around he only succeeded in cutting off a few locks. She screamed and the man ran out of the door. As he ran another man, who had evidently been watching the rear of the building, joined him and together they made their escape.

A report was sent to the station at once and Sergt. Nash was detailed to look up the man. He got as good a description as was obtainable from a boy who saw the men from a stable back of the hotel and from the young lady. He arrested a young fellow who gave his name as William McCarthy. He had a razor in his clothing, but nothing else to show that he may have been the man who was after Miss Panzeram's golden locks. The boy partly identified McCarthy as the assailant.

Miss Panzeram has a beautiful head of hair remaining. It is golden brown in color and reaches to her waist. The locks which were severed were found outside the door, where they were dropped by the man.

The perpetrator of the deed, if caught, will have to answer to the charge of making an assault with intent to disfigure. The penalty is imprisonment for one year in the penitentiary.

LAW WOULD SHUT RANGE SCHOOLS

MINNESOTA IRON COUNTRY IS IN ARMS AGAINST THE PROPOSED TONNAGE TAX.

SCHOOLS DEPEND ON MINES

CITIZENS PROTEST AGAINST LAW WHICH WOULD DESTROY EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM.

Hibbing, Minn., Feb. 13.—Threatened by legislation which would be totally destructive of the public school system of the iron ranges of Minnesota, the people of the mining country in St. Louis and Itasca counties have combined to make an appeal to the legislature and the state at large. The excited state of public feeling here is not comprehensible to the people of the state generally, for in urban and rural communities questions affecting taxation have not the vital interest for people of every condition that the same topic has here. Confronted by the proposition now before the legislature that a tonnage tax be imposed on iron ore, the people of the ranges are aroused because by the operation of such a tax system practically the entire source of revenue for the maintenance of the public schools would be removed from the local assessment rolls.

There is no difference of opinion on the ranges regarding this tax proposition and its effect. The range towns have been wrought to the pitch of holding mass meetings—not perfunctory affairs attended by a few taxpayers, but gatherings in which hundreds of people take part and speeches and resolutions setting forth the sentiments of the participants are indulged. There is a good deal of bitterness shown in some of the speeches, but most of them deplore the ignorance of conditions here which is responsible for the proposed taxation. The protest that has taken form in these meetings comes altogether from the people. The mining companies have no material interest in the proposed law, for it makes no difference to them whether they pay their taxes to the county or to the state. They are but incidentally interested in the matter by reason of the fact that the maintenance of the public schools contributes to the betterment of living conditions and promotes the progress in intelligence of the mining population. It is everywhere observable that the resolutions passed do not complain about the evident desire of the members of the legislature to secure a larger state revenue from the iron mining industry, but they do object to a change in the manner of collecting the taxes. The contention is made that if a tonnage tax is imposed it will necessarily carry with it the exemption of the mines from the realty assessment, and thus take away from St. Louis county 95 per cent of the assessed valuation outside of the city of Duluth.

The towns on the ranges do not represent any very considerable assessed valuation, while some of the school districts have an enormous assessed value. Here at Hibbing is a case in point. In the school district here the mines are down on the assessment roll for nearly $27,000,000, while the total assessment, including the village of Hibbing, is but $700,000 more. The schools are centered at the town here and the school population is out of all proportion to the taxable value of the property, with the mines excepted.

Same Conditions Everywhere.

The situation at Hibbing fairly typifies that on the ranges generally. At Eveleth $58,000 is raised annually for school purposes. Taking the mines out of the assessment, the property left subject to taxation would yield $540 annually for school purposes. At Ely, on the Vermillion range, the oldest mining community in the iron district, and where property values outside of the mines might be expected to have attained a maximum of value, 88 per cent of the assessment is represented by the mines. At Virginia 86 per cent of the assessed valuation is in the mines; at Chisholm 96 per cent. One-[illegible] of the entire assessed valuation of [illegible] county—which is not generally regarded as a great iron county—is in the mines, and there is one school district in that county where there is an $85,000 house, and only 6 per cent of the assessed valuation is outside of the mines.

With these conditions, it is not to be wondered at that the people on the ranges are protesting and making preparation to assail the legislature by means of delegations and appeal to the fair-mindedness of the people of the state to help them to avert the impending calamity. There is everywhere the feeling that the enactment of such a measure as the proposed tonnage tax would not be possible if the conditions were understood of the people at large. There is no attempt at tax dodging, no disposition to say that the state is not entitled to the revenue it wants from the mines; everybody is willing to subscribe to the proposition that the assessment on the mines might be increased and a larger revenue had for state purposes. The valuation of the mines in St. Louis county was raised to $75,000,000 last year, and the mining companies would interpose no serious objection to a further raise. The people would not lift a hand to prevent such an increase as the authorities might propose. But there is a profound feeling of indignation here over the possibility of the legislature passing a law that will be destructive of these communities—for the range communities must fall if the schools are closed, and the schools must close if the revenue from the mines is taken by the state. There is no wealth on the ranges except that in the mines; there is no hope of agricultural development, and there is a laboring population that is held in check and is fast being brought to the point of assimilation by the education of the children. To stop the work of education would throw this vast body of ignorant foreigners back to the state in which they lived in Austria, Hungary, Italy and other countries of central Europe. That would inevitably bring about a condition of anarchy.

The people interested in the schools, the district officials and superintendents, have undertaken the enlightenment of the people of the rest of the state as to conditions here. These men represent the best citizenship on the ranges. They have created a remarkably efficient and modern system of schools. They have builded largely and well, and the schools are of the best modern type. Now confronted by the probability that their schools may be destroyed they have gone actively to work to show the people of Minnesota that the proposed legislation would be as perniciously tyrannical as any ever framed for the destruction of a people. Their appeal will be to the people through the press, supplementing the efforts of the committees that have been appointed to labor with the legislature directly.

Charles E. Young who was widely known in southern and western Minnesota in educational work before coming to the range, is superintendent of the Hibbing schools. He has sent out an appeal and protest to the press of the state in which he says:

Hibbing's Protest.

"Apart from Duluth we have on the iron ranges of this county four high school towns, which employ 158 teachers and enroll over 5,000 pupils; also eight graded school towns employing 68 teachers and enrolling over 2,500 pupils; also 38 rural districts. In size and conditions this district of Hibbing is a fair sample of the high school districts. We contain a territory of 279 square miles, maintaining two brick and six frame schools with 41 instructors and enrolling this year 1,350 pupils. The school building erected during the past ten years cost $190,000 and of this $65,000 are still due to the State of Minnesota on building loans.

"The children in the schools represent over twenty nations, are in a great majority of foreign birth and the enrollment has been growing at the rate of 35 per cent per annum. Within the district practically all of the assessable property is in the mines, except in the village of Hibbing where there is some value in the form of frame buildings and personal property. The town has no other industry than mining; the timber has all been removed from the adjacent land and to-day more than 92 per cent of the taxes are paid on the mines. If all of the mining property should be exempt from the school taxes, as under the proposed law, the schools of the Hibbing district will have to be closed next year. Under the conditions that will follow the proposed law the district will be left burdened with a bonded debt to meet which will require all the available school revenue. If the board levies the maximum rate of school tax we will receive too little to pay the state claims for interest and payment on the principal of the debt due the state funds.

"It is the educational and not the political question that is alarming this region. To turn loose upon the streets of these mining towns the children of nearly 100,000 people, mostly foreigners, who have more than the average eagerness for an American education, is an act that is fraught with future disgrace and peril for the entire State of Minnesota."

At the first of a series of meetings to be held here to give expression to the feeling of the people and take such steps as may be necessary to preserve the schools, 200 people were present and committees to meet the junketing committee from the legislature, to draw resolutions, to solicit funds for carrying on the work to go to St. Paul were appointed. The delegation that will go to St. Paul from St. Louis county will include five prominent citizens of Hibbing. At the meeting $553 were collected in small sums and this has been increased to nearly $800.

Chisholm Is Wrought Up.

Chisholm, Minn., Feb.—A defense fund of $550 has been raised to pay the expenses of a committee to go to St. Paul and protest to the legislature against the passage of the proposed tonnage tax which would destroy the schools of Chisholm. The excitement that was caused by the discussion at the mass meeting on the tax question is somewhat abated by the belief that the legislature will not exercise its power to confiscate the revenues of this school district by imposing a tonnage tax when it is informed of what the local conditions are. School Superintendent Minch is preparing a statement of the conditions which will show how utterly this district is dependent on the mines for the maintenance of the schools. W. G. Shane, village recorder says:

"We have nothing to tax but the mines. The population is almost wholly foreign. If we lose the revenues from the mines bankruptcy is sure and anarchy will follow the closing of the schools. Life would be impossible here without the schools. We will send a strong delegation to St. Paul and will make such a showing to the legislature as must avert this impending evil."

The assessed valuation of Chisholm, including the mines in the village is $4,103,166. Without the mines there would be a valuation of about 3 per cent of this sum.

Means Death to Ely.

Ely, Minn., Feb. —Following the appointment of a committee to go to St. Paul to protest against a return to the tonnage tax system of securing revenue for the state from the mines, School Superintendent C. L. Newberry has sent out an appeal to the state. Mr. Newberry says:

"Any attempt to withdraw iron properties from taxation by ordinary methods, or any attempt to divert monies raised by taxation on iron properties for the support of schools and local government, cannot be regarded as other than sounding the death-knell of our public schools and public improvements in the great mining region of Northern Minnesota.

"In withdrawing the iron mines from local taxation, or the taxes on iron properties from local use, eight-ninths of Ely's taxable property is withdrawn. The assessed valuation in the city is now $3,252,129. The assessed value outside of the iron properties is $421,747. On this last named sum would fall the burden of a tax sufficient to educate 1,000 children. As the amount needed to run the Ely schools last year was $45,000, a school tax of 11 per cent would be imposed. As the property could not possibly stand this tax the schools must close if a tonnage tax is imposed, and we are deprived of the revenue from the mines under the method of direct taxation. It would be necessary to impose a tax of over 200 mills for all purposes if the mines were taken out of the assessment roll, and such a tax would be confiscatory. Never before in the history of Minnesota has a more alarming question arisen. The proposed law will devastate our mining towns. The measure will starve and dwarf our schools and public service; it will necessitate the immediate closing of the schools in all the range towns."

Eveleth Joins the Protest.

Eveleth, Minn., Feb. .—The alarm expressed by the leading men of Eveleth at the mass meeting held to take steps to prevent the enactment of a tonnage tax law is subsiding in the knowledge that effective action is being taken to put the case of the range towns fairly before the people of Minnesota. The various committees appointed by the meeting have organized and practically every business man is a committee of one to send out letters to friends throughout the state asking that information as to effect of a tonnage tax be spread. The Eveleth Business Men's association is sending out literature showing the local conditions and the certain and pernicious effect of such a change in the method of collecting taxes as is proposed.

"It would be just as fair," says Mayor Jessmore, "to pass a law imposing a tax upon the production of the fields of Southern Minnesota and take the revenue for state purpose as to impose this tonnage tax and take from the communities here, in which the wealth is in the mines, the sources of their revenue. It is a matter of life or death with these mining communities."

The school board is getting actively into the work of spreading information as to the actual conditions here, inspired by the knowledge that its present revenue of $58,000 for school purposes would be reduced under a tonnage law to about $540. Mayor Jessmore will head the delegation to St. Paul.

Itasca County Would Be Hard Hit.

Grand Rapids, Minn., Feb. .—Following the expression of feeling indulged in at the mass meeting held here Monday night to protest against the passage of the tonnage tax law Hattie F. Booth, county superintendent of schools, has sent out a statement of school conditions which shows that the proposed law would destroy the schools in this county in the districts where they are most needed. Says Mrs. Booth:

"The mining property stands for one-third of the assessed valuation of the county. In Districts No. 2 and No. 9 there is practically no revenue except from the mines. In District No. 2 there is an assessed valuation of $2,828,431, of which 94 per cent is in the mines. The state has loaned the district $100,000 to carry on the school work, and the removal of the mines from the assessment roll would close up the schools and bankrupt the district. In Districts 2 and 9 mining is the only occupation of the people, and if the bill becomes a law we will have to close the schools. The effect of this would be the raising of a class of children who would become criminals and the state would have to support them in institutions."

Itasca county is interested in the tonnage tax as a business proposition to a greater extent than St. Louis county. The mines here are just being developed at a high cost, much of the ore requiring special treatment. It is assumed that under a tonnage tax no new mines would be opened and the operating companies would not prosecute the development of low grade properties for many years, not until the ones which are less expensive in the mining had been removed from the other ranges.

Itasca county will send a big delegation to St. Paul to fight the passage of the tonnage tax law.

Charm of Uncertainty.

"There is a lot of excitement in running an automobile," said the cheerful citizen.

"Yes," answered the man who smells of gasolene, "it gives life the charm of uncertainty. You never know whether you are going to be late for dinner or early at the emergency hospital."

Of Interest to Women.

Every woman naturally should be healthy and strong, but a great many women, unfortunately, are not, owing to the unnatural condition of the lives we lead. Headache, backache and a general tired condition are prevalent amongst the women of to-day, and to relieve these conditions women rush to the druggists for a bottle of some preparation supposed to be particularly for them, and containing—nobody knows what. If they would just get a box of Brandreth's Pills, and take them regularly every night for a time, all their trouble would disappear, as these pills regulate the organs of the feminine system. The same dose always has the same effect, no matter how long they are used.

Brandreth's pills have been in use for over a century, and are for sale everywhere, plain or sugar-coated.

A horseman would rather admit anything else than that he got the worst of a trade.

It's not always the saving man who has most chance of salvation.

THREE EPOCHS IN A WOMAN'S LIFE

MRS. ELVA BARBER EDWARDS

MRS. GEORGE WALTERS

There are three critical stages in a woman's life which leave their mark in her career. The first of these stages is womanhood, or the change from a care free girl to budding womanhood, The second is motherhood, and the third is Change of Life.

Perils surround each of these stages, and most of the misery that comes to women through ill health dates from one or another of these important crises.

Women should remember that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made from native roots and herbs has carried thousands of young girls over the critical period of puberty, has prepared mothers for childbirth, and in later years carried them safely through the change of life more successfully than any other remedy in the world. Thousands of testimonials from grateful persons, two of which are here published, substantiate this fact beyond contradiction.

Mrs. George Walters of Woodlawn, Ill. writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I feel it my duty to tell you of the good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done me in preparing for childbirth. After suffering and losing my children a friend advised me to try your valuable medicine, and the result was that I had very little inconvenience, a quick recovery and as healthy a child as can be found anywhere. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a blessing to all expectant mothers."

Mrs. Elva Barber Edwards, of Cathlamet, Wash., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I want to tell you how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound carried me through the critical period of the Change of Life without any trouble whatever, also cured me of a very severe female weakness, I cannot say enough in praise of what your medicine has done for me."

What Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for Mrs. Walters and Mrs. Edwards it will do for other women in their condition. Every suffering woman in the United States is asked to accept the following invitation. It is free, will bring you health and may save your life.

Mrs. Pinkham's Invitation to Women.

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. From the symptoms given, the trouble may be located and the quickest and surest way of recovery advised. Out of her vast volume of experience in treating female ills Mrs. Pinkham probably has the very knowledge that will help your case. Her advice is free and helpful.

During its long record of more than thirty years its long list of actual cures, entitles Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to the respect and confidence of every fair minded person.

Merely That.

"How will you have your eggs cooked?" asked the waiter.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

BAD BLOOD

THE SOURCE OF ALL DISEASE

Every part of the body is dependent on the blood for nourishment and strength. When this life stream is flowing through the system in a state of purity and richness we are assured of perfect and uninterrupted health; because pure blood is nature's safe-guard against disease. When, however, the body is fed on weak, impure or polluted blood, the system is deprived of its strength, disease germs collect, and the trouble is manifested in various ways. Pustular eruptions, pimples, rashes and the different skin affections show that the blood is in a feverish and diseased condition as a result of too much acid or the presence of some irritating humor. Sores and Ulcers are the result of morbid, unhealthy matter in the blood, and Rheumatism, Catarrh, Scrofula, Contagious Blood Poison, etc., are all deep-seated blood disorders that will continue to grow worse as long as the poison remains. These impurities and poisons find their way into the blood in various ways. Often a sluggish, inactive condition of the system, and torpid state of the avenues of bodily waste, leaves the refuse and waste matters to sour and form uric and other acids, which are taken up by the blood and distributed throughout the circulation. Coming in contact with contagious diseases is another cause for the poisoning of the blood; we also breathe the germs and microbes of Malaria into our lungs, and when these get into the blood in sufficient quantity it becomes a carrier of disease instead of health. Some are so unfortunate as to inherit bad blood, perhaps the dregs of some old constitutional disease of ancestors is handed down to them and they are constantly annoyed and troubled with it. Bad blood is the source of all disease, and until this vital fluid is cleansed and purified the body is sure to suffer in some way. For blood troubles of any character S. S. S. is the best remedy ever discovered. It goes down into the circulation and removes any and all poisons, supplies the healthful properties it needs, and completely and permanently cures blood diseases of every kind. The action of S. S. S. is so thorough that hereditary taints are removed and weak, diseased blood made strong and healthy so that disease cannot remain. It cures Rheumatism, Catarrh, Scrofula, Sores and Ulcers, Skin Diseases, Contagious Blood Poison, etc., and does not leave the slightest trace of the trouble for future outbreaks. The whole volume of blood is renewed and cleansed after a course of S. S. S. It is also nature's greatest tonic, made entirely of roots, herbs and barks, and is absolutely harmless to any part of the system. S. S. S. is for sale at all first class drug stores. BULLETIN NO. 24

Sent Out By the Minnesota State Dairy and Food Commission.

St. Paul, Minn., Feb. 12, 1907.

Confusion apparently prevails quite extensively in regard to the application of the National Pure Food Law and the effect its enforcement will have upon the enforcement of the existing state laws.

The National Law will effect only commerce in foods and drugs of an interstate nature. Goods produced and sold within the state will not be under the supervision of the federal authorities, and this class of goods make up the larger portion of foodstuffs consumed in the state.

Further than this it is the expressed purpose of the federal officials to collaborate with the state officials in the work and to only reach such offenders as the state officials cannot reach.

In the absence of a state law the manufacturer could carry on a fraudulent business within the state and if he chose to extend his activities to another state all that would be necessary would be for him to establish a branch house in that state and mix his goods after they had crossed the state line. For instance, if a maple syrup distributor in Chicago wished to dispose of adulterated maple syrup in Minnesota he could ship in original packages, pure maple syrup and pure cane syrup into Minnesota, thus complying with the federal law, and then mix the two articles and sell the mixture in the state as absolutely pure maple syrup.

Further than this the enforcement of the federal law will open up new avenues for the enforcement of the state law owing to the fact that extensive investigations will be carried on by the federal authorities and both federal and state departments will enjoy the benefits of such investigations. It would be a disastrous policy for any state to minimize the work or power of its food department in any way.

The attention of retail dealers especially is called to attempt of D. Auerbach & Sons, New York, manufacturers of confectionery, to create the impression among dealers that this department has modified its ruling prohibiting coal-tar dye in confectionery. This they have attempted through correspondence with dealers in the state. Coal-tar dye is prohibited in confectionery by law, it is not a ruling, and the commission has no authority to take such a course were it so disposed. Dealers will be held responsible for the sale of any confectionery colored with coal-tar dye.

EDWARD K. SLATER,
Commissioner.

That it never does a bit of good to criticize a fool.

That one of the best things out is a decayed tooth.

That there is one good thing about grief; it seldom lasts long.

That too many men talk an hour for every minute they work.

That a woman's instinct makes good as often as her judgment.

That anything that is worth while is worth more or less money.

That today is the time to do things tomorrow is the time to do nothing.

That it's a poor lawyer who can't construe a law in more ways than one.

That you should keep your eyes on the man who never makes mistakes.

That if all the world loves a lover it has a queer way of showing it at times.

That when the clock goes wrong it ought to be ashamed to face its owner.

That our troubles don't amount to much—from the viewpoint of our neighbors.

That the only winter sport the old man cares for is reading the thermometer.

That before you call a man a liar you should be sure you are right—then don't.

That it's difficult for a girl who is unable to get married to realize how lucky she is.

That our idea of a strong minded man is one who never talks about the weather.

That some people's excuse for making bad breaks is that it's never too late to mend.

That the mother who raises children to respect her doesn't get her theories from books.

That the pessimist derives a lot of pleasure from his efforts to spoil the pleasure of others.

That it is a mighty poor cigar that isn't a good one if it happens to be the last one available.

That insurance against the visitations of mothers-in-law would be popular with some men.

That a girl with a swanlike neck may be all right in a novel, but she doesn't show up so well in real life.

That if a man ever yearns to lead a dog's life it is when he sees a pretty girl fondling a pretty poodle.

That it costs some men an awful lot of money to keep out of jail, and it costs some others even more to stay in it.

That there is nothing so monotonous as the music made by the man who is forever harping on one string.

That there comes a time in married life when a man says to himself: "What my wife doesn't know won't hurt her."

That about the only difference between accepting a position and getting a job is to be found in the age of the applicant.

That the amusement of some boys loses a great deal of its fascination if they have someone's permission to indulge in it.

That ashes sprinkled on the sidewalk at this season of the year look better to the average man than a marble fountain in a front yard.

That there is too much attention paid to the "influence of women over men, and too little said about the fear men have of women.

That the theory that "the Lord will provide" is a poor one for the man who wants to own an automobile.

That the young men who call on a girl never seem to amount to much to the girl's father.

That a man's wife's kin never expect his children to amount to much because they bear such a resemblance to their father, but if the children really do turn out well it does not help the father's standing any.

OLD RESIDENT DIES IN ST. PAUL

Rock J. Lizee, One of the First Settlers of Red Lake County, Passes Away.

On Thursday, the 21st of February, at St. Paul occurred the death of Rock J. Lizee, aged 50 years, one of the pioneer settlers of this county and the organizer of the township of Terrebone.

Mr. Lizee was born in Canada in 1857, and came here in 1879, going to Terrebone, where later he organized the township and was the leader in the organization of several school districts in that vicinity. He was also town clerk there for eight years.

He removed to Crookston in 1886, where he remained a year, going from there to St. Paul, where resided ever since.

Mr. Lizee was extensively engaged in railroad contract work in St. Paul, having been associated with the contracting firm of Foley Bros.

A widow and six children survive him: Albert, Archie, Clem, Rose May, Blanche and Mrs. Philip Ulmer.

There is hardly a resident of Red Lake county who does not know of Mr. Lizee and his good works. His brother, Arthur Lizee, of Red Lake Falls; C. O. Lizee, o. Argyle; Mrs. Iza Marchildon, of North Yakima; Mrs. Joseph LaBissoniere, of St. Paul, and Napoleon Lizee, of Somers, Mont., attended the funeral. There being one brother, George Lizee, of Terrebone, and one sister, Mrs. Thomas Kenchlar, of International Falls, who were unable to be present.

The furneral took place from St. Luke's Catholic church in St. Paul and was largely attended. Interment was at Calvary cemetery.

LOSE VALUABLE STEED.

Zaizer Bros. had the misfortune to lose one of their best horses Wednesday afternoon, when a team being driven by one of the employes became unmanageable and dashed down Main street.

After a short run the team became separated by the breaking of the harness and one, "Old Ned," dashed head foremost against the brick wall of the Hall restaurant, killing him almost instantly.

It's a pleasure to tell our readers about a Cough Cure like Dr. Shoop's. For years Dr. Shoop has fought against the use of opium, Chloroform, or other unsafe ingredients commonly found in cough remedies. Dr. Shoop, it seems, has welcomed the Pure Food and Drug Law recently enacted, for he has worked along similar lines for many years. For nearly 20 years Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure containers have had a warning printed on them against Opium and other narcotic poisons. He has thus made it possible for mothers to to protect their children by simply insisting on having Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. Sold by all dealers.

Messrs. L. C. Simons, O. Thomas and Dr. Watson went to Crookston this morning, where they will take the "goat exercise" in the instituting of a new Knights of Pythias lodge there today. A large number of visiting members are expected and after the lodge instituting a banquet will follow at the Hotel Crookston.

Last evening was enlivened by laughable trial of the State Minnesota vs. Armstrong, brought on complaint of Franz Freund, who charged Armstrong with having given him a shaking. A jury was impaneled, Judge Taylor officiated and the county attorney prosecuted. The defendant was represented by Attorneys Grady and Boughton. The jury, after being out just long enough to take a ballot, brought in a verdict for the defendant. The costs of the suit will be large.

A Thief River man came to town the other day and, after acquiring a large fund of high spirits, proceeded to quicken the movements of one of local livery men by "taking a punch" at him. A stick of wood properly used had a soothing effect on the Thief River man's nerves, and he started for home. Going up Kretzschmar avenue his desire for acrobatic exercises again overcame his discretion, and he was inflated with a wish to drive ove to Lawton's house, which is just below the avenue, the roof being on a level with the road. No sooner said than done. His team was found tangled up among the trees on the river flat next morning.

FARMERS' MEETING

Held at St. Hilaire Last Friday Was a Well Attended and Enthusiastic One.

There was a large attendance at the Farmers' meeting held at St. Hilaire last Friday, and was composed of more actual farmer than at any other meeting ever held in the county.

The object of the meeting was to discuss the best means of feeding of cattle for dairy purposes and to encourage the farmers in raising stock.

The principal address was delivered by Prof. A. J. McGuire, superintendent of the State Experimental farm at Grand Rapids, Minn., who made a very forcible talk as the best way to promote dairy interests.

C. O. Carlson, of Erskine, one of the most successful farmers in Northern Minnesota, also addressed the meeting.

The Crookston Male Quartette sang quite a number of songs and received numerous encores.

Much credit Geo. L. Austin, who had all the arrangements in charge, for the able manner in which the meeting was conducted.

SUCCESSFUL CONCERT.

Red Lake Falls Concert Band Continues to Improve—Elk's Quartet Assist.

The fifth monthly concert of the Red Lake Falls Concert band, last Friday at the Metropolitan Opera house, was a decided success, both from a musical standpoint and in attendance. The opera house was crowded with an audience such as should greet the band every month, and those who turned out to hear the music were well repaid.

The Elks' Quartet, of Crookston, who assisted the band, added greatly to the entertainment and were heartily applauded for their clever songs.

A claronet solo by Drector E. H. Bruckman was one of the features of the evening and was applauded until Mr. Bruckman consented to an encore.

Harry B. Healy, in a trombone selo, was another feature of the program and was assisted in an encore by Clem Brunelle on the cornet.

The band orchestra pleased the audience with an exceptionally fine overture and an encore.

Thomas Germo, in a few well chosen words thanked the Elks' Quartet in behalf of the band and the citizens.

The band certainly deserves credit for its faithful practice, and the director, Mr. Bruckman, clearly demonstrates his ability to bring the band up to a high standard of excellence.

WASHINGTON BIRTHDAY PARTY.

Mesdames L. C. Simons, Thomas Germo and H. W. Knox gave a Washington birthday party at the home of Thomas Germo for the members of the Study club last Thursday evening. There was a guessing contest on contemporaneous men and women. A cherry tree contest was another feature.

In the guessing contest Mrs. Chamberlain and Miss Laura Willson carried off the honors, each receiving a crown of laurel.

AN INNOVATION.

The men of the Presbyterian church are going to give a supper that will rival anything in that special line that has been pulled off in many a day. It will be served at the close of the Lenten season, on Wednesday, the 3d day of April. The cooking is to be cone exclusively by the men, in every detail it is to be a men's doing, with the exception of the eating. And save as to this single exception, a prodigous effort will be made to outclass the ladies. These men have among their number renowned cooks, and they will find active service to the end that the success of the venture will never be brought into open debate by those who will be fortunate enough to sample their cooking. While those who come will be regaled with the delicious dishes, such alone as the men can prepare, the tables will groan and creak with their [illegible] of delectables, and mus[illegible] will swell the breeze. LEGISLATOR AND THE LOBBYIST

How the Special Interests Attempt to Block Reform Legislation.

(Special Correspondence.)

St. Paul, Feb. 26, 1907—The corporate interests are just now engaged in a strenuous effort to prevent the drastic legislation demanded by the platforms of both the political parties. Although fully three-fourths of the members of both houses are pledged to two-cent fare, anti-pass, reciprocal demurrage and lower freight rates, there are evidences of wavering on the part of many of the legislators, and it is an open question whether much remedial legislation will be enacted at the present session.

The high-priced lawyers and lobbyists of the railroads are exceedingly busy. They know all the tricks of oratory and persuasion; all the artifices of delay and postponement. They know, too, how effective are the cries of confiscation and persecution. And, then, the legislators are in a different environment. The hard life of the farm, the injustice of the railroads and monopolies to the country town are forgotten or minimized by constant association with and servile attention from those fortunate enough to be beyond the reach of petty misfortune. The free pass, the express and telephone frank and other delicate bribes make the troubles of their constituents more or less impersonal. The make-up of the committees in both senate and house insures objection and dilatory methods. So, notwithstanding the unanimous demand from St. Vincent to Caledonia and from Luverne to Grand Marais, there is reason for the belief that the present legislature will fall far short of the expectation of the people.

A few good Republicans, whose party prejudice is stronger than the interests of the people are asking themselves what is to become of the Republican party if the legislature fails to make good. But the corporations are not interested in the fate of any party. The railroad president, the big jobber and the big city banker is a Republican or a Democrat from purely mercenary motives. He can change his political coat easily when business reasons suggest. It was said a few years ago that James J. Hill was a Democrat nationally and Republican locally. As a matter of fact he was not then and is not now one or the other. He liked the Cleveland brand of Democracy and the Merriam brand of Republicanism. He belongs to any and every party he can use. The Great Northern is Republican in some states, Democratic in others, and as far as national politics is concerned it is at present decidedly mugwumpistic. If Bryan or Johnson or Hearst should be the Democratic candidate for president, and Foraker, Taft, Shaw or Fairbanks the republican nominee, the Great Northern and the other great interests would be Republican; if conditions were reversed and the "safe and sane" Democracy triumph the Great Northern would reverse itself as gracefully and logically as a supreme court.

The great governmental policies and party platforms make no appeal to corporationdom. They believe in party, but they believe always in the party they can control. And they can be on all sides of a question at once. In congress they "view with alarm" the centralization of legislative and executive power; in the state capitols they fight aggressiveness of the doctrine of state rights. They are for ship subsidies if they happen to own a line of steamships, and opposed if the other fellow does. Always and everywhere, greed and selfishness is the dominant and all-pervading theme.

And the corporations have money to spend if there is a promise of getting new legislation or hanging on to the old. Look at the vast interests centered in Minnesota. The big transcontinental railway systems, the vast iron mines—besides which the wealth of Solomon was infinitesimal, the great jobbing centers of St. Paul and Minneapolis supplying an empire with food and raiment and luxuries, the lumber mills and the vast grain and flour trade, all join in the universal cry that the interests are not receiving a fair deal.

This, in brief, is what the average legislator is up against. And he must be of more than average honesty and of more than average backbone if he escape the wiles of the many-guised tempter. The ramifications of the insiduous lobbyist knows no bounds. He reaches down through the political and business to the religious and social stratas, and like Mephistopheles of old makes the path of error seem a path of roses.

But the people back home are watching, and the legislator neglecting his duty and breaking his pledge is going to hear from the farm house and the country store. They beg no more, they beseech no more. They demand that the reforms they have been promised be forthcoming, and without unnecessary delay. If they don't get the reforms, they get the legislators at the next election.

VILLAGE ELECTION.

St. Hilaire Spectator: The annual village election occurs on March 12 this year and prospective candidates are already beginning to sit up and take notice. The voters should exercise the greatest care this year in the selection of the council, as on them depends the success of the electric light and power plant which is now under way. The prospective candidates for the office of village president so far as mentioned are Daniel Patterson, E. M. Hoff and A. S. Wilson, and it is probable that one of these gentlemen will be selected. The affairs of the village would be safe in the hands of any one of the three. Only men who have an interest in the betterment of the village should be selected as much depends on them the coming year. The whole council should be composed of well known, progressive business men who will take an interest in village affairs.

Romance in a Banana.

A Handsworth servant girl has had a singular romance arising out of a love letter which she found inside a banana. When preparing a banana for the table she noticed a bird's quill projecting, and inside was a letter written in the smallest characters, but legible, says the London Tribune.

The writer enclosed his address and stated that he was engaged upon the Jamaica plantation. His life was very lonely and he desired a mate to share his loneliness. The girl decided to answer the letter, and two months later received a further reply repeating the offer of marriage.

Correspondence continued for about a year. Both were looking forward to marriage, when, unfortunately for the Jamaica planter, a former soldier lover of the young lady appeared on the scene and the wedding with the old sweetheart has now been fixed.

Always in Use.

"Could I borrow your flatirons tomorrow," ventured the new neighbor.

"Oh, no. But by the time I finish ironing Uncle Billy gets the misery in his wisdom tooth and has to hold hot irons on his jaw, and when he finally gets off to sleep the rest of the family need the irons to throw at the stray cats in the back yard."

MRS. EVELYN THAW ENTERS ON ORDEAL

DISTRICT ATTORNEY BEGINS THE CROSS-EXAMINATION OF THE YOUNG WIFE.

THAW'S WILL IN EVIDENCE

INTRODUCED TO SHOW THAT THAW WAS INSANE WHEN HE KILLED WHITE.

New York, Feb. 20.—"I never wanted to shoot the creature. I never wanted to kill him. I knew he was a foul creature, destroying the mothers and daughters of America, but I wanted through legal means to bring him to trial. I wanted to get him into court—to bring him to justice. But Providence took charge of it; it was an act of Providence."

This is Harry K. Thaw's own story of the killing of Stanford White. It was told by him to Dr. Britton D. Evans, the alienist, last August in the Tombs. Yesterday Dr. Evans repeated the prisoner's words to the jury which is trying Thaw for his life.

Will in Evidence.

In further bulwarking their contention that Thaw was insane when he killed Stanford White, the defendant's counsel succeeded yesterday in placing before the jury the will executed by Thaw the night of his marriage, in April, 1905, and a codicil to the will executed at the same time.

The will and the codicil, as read to the jurors yesterday, were offered in evidence as cumulative testimony of Thaw's mental unsoundness prior to the killing of White. In his will Thaw provided that his executors should set apart the sum of $50,000 for the investigation of his death in case of a violent or suspicious end.

To Secure Redress From White.

In the codicil Thaw left to a lawyer in Pittsburg the sum of $7,500 to be used in securing legal redress from Stanford White and one other person whose name was not allowed to be read; for the benefit of four young women who, Thaw declared, had been the victims of "degrading assaults" in a house "furnished and used for orgies by Stanford White and other inhuman scoundrels." Thaw also bequeathed sums of $2,500 each to the Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, Anthony Comstock and a lawyer named in his codicil, to be used in discovering further alleged misdeeds by Stanford White and securing redress for the women.

Tuesday's Proceedings.

New York, Feb. 21. — Mrs. Evelyn Nesbit Thaw yesterday entered upon the ordeal of her cross-examination and before District Attorney Jerome had had the witness in charge for half an hour he had secured from the court a ruling which apparently opens the way for bringing into the trial of Harry K. Thaw all manner of evidence which may tend to discredit the defendant's wife. Heretofore it had been held that the rules of evidence protected young Mrs. Thaw and that, regardless of whether her story was true or false, the fact that she had told it to her husband was the one essential point.

Opens Doors Wide.

Mrs. Thaw had been allowed to repeat the story so that the jury might judge as to its effect in unbalancing the mind of the man on trial for the murder of Stanford White.

Mr. Jerome, by a simple question, opened the way for the introduction of testimony tending to show the truth or falsity of Mrs. Thaw's story. He asked the witness:

"Was the story you told Mr. Thaw true?"

"It was," she replied firmly.

Mr. Delmas, Thaw's leading counsel, objected strongly to the question, but Justice Fitzgerald held it to be competent as tending to show the credibility of the witness.

Jumps From Point to Point.

Mr. Jerome jumped from point to point in her story, and under the plea of testing her credibility was allowed to ask many pertinent questions.

Mr. Jerome brought out that Mrs. Thaw had written to Stanford White from Boulogne after Thaw had proposed to her in Paris. "Did you also cable Mr. White?" he asked. The witness could not remember. The cross-examination had barely gotten into full swing when adjournment for the day was ordered.

Tells Fate of Other Women.

In completing her direct testimony Mrs. Thaw had told of the conversations she and her husband had had regarding the fate of other young women at the hands of Stanford White. One of these girls was known as "The Pie Girl." She was fifteen years of age, and wore only a gauze dress when she sprang from a big pie at a stag dinner.

The witness declared that May Mackenzie had told her that Stanford White, when told she and Harry were very happy together, had remarked: "Pooh! it won't last. I will get her back."

Describes Three Dens.

Harry Thaw's letter to Anthony Comstock describing three houses or studios where he declared Stanford White and "other scoundrels" lured young girls was read.

Mrs. Caine, who was the only other witness of the day, testified to overhearing Harry Thaw ask Mrs. Nesbit for her daughter's hand in 1903.

SEN. SMOOT FLAYS POLIGAMY

SAYS PLURAL MARRIAGES ARE FROWNED UPON BY MORMON CHURCH.

Washington, Feb. 21. — Speaking in his own defense before the senate Senator Reed Smoot of Utah condemned polygamy in the strongest terms, declared that polygamy does not now exist in Utah, and insisted that he had never taken an oath as apostle in the church which would in any way prevent him from discharging the duties of a senator and citizen with the utmost fidelity. He himself had never had but one wife, and would not think of giving his personal sanction to any other arrangement in the case of other members of the Mormon church.

Polygamy a Dead Letter.

In support of his contention that polygamy was a dead letter among the Mormons, Mr. Smoot took up in great detail the early campaign against the practice by the government and the tacit agreement on the part of the church to abandon it. The Mormons, he said, at first defended their rights in this respect as a part of their religion. Finally, wishing to obey the law of the land, they agreed to stop the practice, and in 1890 a manifesto was issued discontinuing plural marriages.

"In closing," he said, "let me say under my obligation as a senator that I have never taken any oath or obligation, religion or otherwise, which conflicts in the slightest degree with my duty as a senator. I owe no allegiance to any church or other organization which in any way interfere with my supreme allegiance, in civil affairs, to my country—an allegiance which I freely, fully and gladly give."

JAP SQUADRON AT HONOLULU.

Enthusiastic and Hearty Welcome Tendered the Visitors.

Honolulu, Feb. 21. — The Japanese training squadron arrived here yesterday. At 10 o'clock yesterday morning Admiral Temika, from the flagship Natsussista, communicated his approach by means of wireless telegraphy. Rear Admiral Very replied, welcoming him.

As the Japanese warships entered the harbor a national salute was fired. The admirals then exchanged salutes and the Japanese vessels docked at the naval wharf.

All the shipping in the harbor is decorated and American and Japanese flags are floating everywhere. Five thousand Japanese, in holiday attire, were on the harbor front awaiting the arrival of the squadron. While the welcome was demonstrative, it was none the less enthusiastic and hearty.

DEATH ROLL MAY REACH 100.

Fifty-Four Bodies Recovered From Wrecked Mine in Mexico.

Mexico City, Feb. 21.—The Associated Press last night received a telegram from an official of the Las Esperanza mines, in the state of Coahuila, at which place a disastrous explosion occurred Monday, saying:

"Rescue work continues unceasingly and at 5:30 p. m. fifty-four bodies had been recovered from the mine. Of these thirty were Japanese. Eleven injured men are in the hospital, including three Japanese. Two of the injured cannot live."

Many men are still entombed. It is believed that the death roll will total between 75 and 100. The property loss is said to have been heavy.

Fisher, and the result of the legislation would be to place all public utilities under control of a board similar to that which is provided for the traction system of the city.

MRS. THAW BREAKS DOWN ON STAND

TEARS STREAM DOWN HER CRIMSON CHEEK AS MR. JEROME PROBES HER PAST.

SHAMEFUL SECRETS LAID BARE

RELATIONS WITH WHITE CONTINUED AFTER RUIN—OTHER INDISCRETIONS.

New York, Feb. 23. — Under the stress of a cross-examination in which District Attorney Jerome gave no quarter, Mrs. Evelyn Nesbit Thaw broke down yesterday upon the witness stand. With blinding tears burning their way down cheeks which from ashen white had flushed to crimson, she admitted that after her first experience with Stanford White her relations with the architect continued for several months. But this was not all.

Damaging Confessions.

There were other confessions which, while damaging to her own character, accentuated all the more the terrible personal sacrifice she is making in the effort to save her husband from death in the electric chair.

After bringing out that her relations with White continued for some time, Mr. Jerome went deeper. Mrs. Thaw admitted that in 1903, after the return from Europe, she spent the night at Thaw's apartments in New York, and that for three weeks he and she occupied connecting apartments at the Grand hotel in this city.

Defendant in Bad Light.

Mrs. Thaw made what was considered her most damaging statement to the defendant when she said he had showed her copies of cablegrams that were being sent to Stanford White from Europe, asking him to use his influence with a certain man in London to prevent Mrs. Nesbit from "raising a fuss" and interfering with Evelyn continuing in the company of Thaw.

Mrs. Thaw also was forced to admit that when she and her mother went abroad with Thaw in 1903 they were still drawing upon the bounty of Stanford White.

Gay Life in Paris.

A letter written by Mrs. Thaw in 1904 and telling of her gay life in Paris with Harry Thaw and a "bunch from the Tenderloin" was read to the jury by Mr. Jerome. This brought out more testimony as to the "Dead Rat," a Parisian cafe. There seemed to be nothing in the witness' past life about which the prosecutor was not informed. He seemed to have been able to trace every step, largely due, doubtless, to the typewritten statement of the mother, which Mr. Jerome nearly always holds in his hand while hurling questions at the daughter.

Court adjourned until Monday.

DRUGGED; HOUSE ROBBED.

Daring Thieves Work in Broad Daylight in Minneapolis.

Minneapolis, Feb. 23. — Mrs. A. L. Pipes, housekeeper for H. E. Walker, was drugged and robbed in her home late yesterday afternoon by two bold thieves who wore no masks. The robbery was one of the most daring ever committed in Minneapolis, and Mr. Walker says its success was due indirectly to the dog muzzling order of Mayor Haynes, for that prevented Mr. Walker's bull dog from becoming a factor in the affair.

After he had heard the story of the robbery Mr. Walker began a search of the house and found that the robbers had taken $30 from a purse as well as a valuable gold watch. The police were called in soon after, but so far they have obtained no clues that would be of value to them.

Mrs. Pipes is not in a dangerous congerous condition.

FROST, NOT FUNSTON, THE HERO

FORMER SOUTH DAKOTA COLONEL LED COMMAND THROUGH MARILOA RIVER.

Chicago, Feb. 23. — Was it Col. Albert S. Frost, candidate for the mayoralty of Evanston, and the First South Dakota volunteers, or Gen. Fererderick Funston and the Twentieth Kansas that swam Marilao river in the face of a hot fire and captured the Filipino redoubts.

History says that it was Funston who performed the feat which won the admiration of a nation. But some of the veterans of the South Dakota regiment believe that Gen. Funston and his Kansas jayhawkers have been getting the glory that belonged to themselves and their commander, and they propose to see the matter righted, even at this late day.

When it became known in South Dakota that the coloned had been placed in nomination for mayor of Evanston they wrote back letters indorsing him and at the same time laying claim for him to the honors that Funston has been enjoying unchallenged so long.

Col. Frost admitted that it was his regiment and himself that swam the Marilao and stormed the intrenchments, and he says that Funston and his regiment did not cross the stream until the next day, after the fight was all over.

ARE NOT SWAMP LANDS.

Twelve Holders of Land File Notice of Actions.

Claiming that the so-called swamp lands taken over by the state at the government land opening last fall are not swamp lands, twelve settlers have filed contests against the land in the Duluth land office. About 1,360 acres are involved. The state authorities have been notified and will be given sixty days in which to give notice if they desire a hearing. The land opened last November is located near Beaver bay, in what is known as township 57, range 9; township 58, range 9, and township 57, range 10. There was a considerable rush at the land office at the time of the opening.

Under the ruling on which the cases are brought up, the settler going on the lands previous to the survey shall be allowed to enter these land in the United States land office, provided he shall have retained his residence there since subject to the swamp land act. The notice of contest must be accompanied by an affidavit from two witnesses, stating that the lands are high and dry, not subject to periodical floods and that it is good agricultural land.

Cruisers probably will be sent out by the state to investigate the land in question, and if they report that it is fit for agricultural purposes the cases probably will be allowed to go by default.

RENEW ELEVATOR TALK.

Farmers About Elmore May Start an Association.

The farmers in the vicinity of Elmore are again agitating the question of organizing a farmers' co-operative elevator company. The plan talked of now is the same as the one on which the creamery at this place is run, and as this is goving excellent satisfaction it will no doubt mean the organizing of the elevator company. The plan has not been submitted to many farmers, but all who have seen it are well to do and are willing to back the project. If the required number of signers can be secured who will pledge themselves to bring all their grain to the elevator the company will rent one of the elevators at Elmore for the year, and when they see that success is assured will either buy one of the elevators at Elmore or build next year.

Prison Has Full Supply.

The state prison did not share with other business houses and private dwellings in the recent scare over fuel shortage. Last fall Warden Wolfer made a contract for the supply of sufficient mill wood to cover the needs of the winter. While teams are kept busy hauling a score of loads daily, the possibility of being shut off by the storm was obviated by storing 500 cords of edgings on a vacant lot a couple of blocks away, and that reserve supply is still being added to.

Looking Ahead.

"Senator, you didn't vote for the increase in congressional salaries, I believe."

"No; I found, on counting noses before hand, that there would be enough votes to carry the measure through without mine."

HOME-MADE CATARRH CURE.

Sufferers Should Make This Up and Try It Anyway.

Any one can mix right at home the best remedy of its kind known. The name "Cyclone" is given to the following prescription, it is supposed, because of its promptness in driving from the blood and system every vestige of catarrhal poison, relieving this foul and dread disease, no matter where located. To prepare the mixture: Get from any good pharmacy one half-ounce Fluid Extract Dandelion, one ounce Compound Kargon and three ounces Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla. Shake well and use in teaspoonful doses after each meal and at bedtime.

This is a harmless, inexpensive mixture, which has a peculiar action upon the eliminative tissues of the Kidneys, assisting them to filter and strain from the blood and system all catarrhal poisons, which, if not eradicated, are absorbed by the mucous membrane, and an open sore or catarrh is the result.

Prepare some and try it, as it is the prescription of an eminent catarrh specialist of national reputation.

Its Distinguishiny Feature.

BRITON A POOR IMMIGRANT.

As a Settler in Canada He Has Done Little for Country.

Canada naturally has strong English sentiments, but the actual leaders in affairs in the Canadian Northwest admit that the English immigrant neither made a past nor assured a future for their new empire. First came the typical English "remittance man," who lived on money from home and subsisted chiefly on whisky. He was a cumberer of the earth and spelled no progress whatever.

Then came the English colonists from the cities, poor folk for the most part and eager to better themselves; willing to work, but in fitness generations behind the men who fought their course across the continent by way of the Appalachians and the Missouri and the Rockies. Later there arrived numbers of the agricultural classes of England, peaceable, hard-working and frugal, admirable settlers, albeit somewhat ignorant of the conditions of life in a new country.

All these are welcomed in Canada, but, although the English immigration in numbers equals that of many other nations combined, it does not equal the American immigration alone in striking power, in foot-pound terms of potential civilization.—Outing.

DREADED TO EAT.

A Quaker Couple's Experience.

How many persons dread to eat their meals, although actually hungry nearly all the time!

Nature never intended this should be so, for we are given a thing called appetite that should guide us as to what the system needs at any time and can digest.

But we get in a hurry, swallow our food very much as we shovel coal into the furnace, and our sense of appetite becomes unnatural and perverted. Then we eat the wrong kind of food or eat too much, and there you are—indigestion and its accompanying miseries.

A Phila. lady said, the other day:

"My husband and I have been sick and nervous for 15 or 20 years from drinking coffee—feverish, indigestion, totally unfit, a good part of the time, for work or pleasure. We actually dreaded to eat our meals.

"We tried doctors and patent medicines that counted up into hundreds of dollars, with little if any benefit.

"Accidentily, a small package of Postum came into my hands. I made some according to directions, with surprising results. We both liked it and have not used any coffee since.

"The dull feeling after meals has left us and we feel better every way. We are so well satisfied with Postum that we recommend it to our friends who have been made sick and nervous and miserable by coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Most people know that if they have been sick they need Scott's Emulsion to bring back health and strength.

But the strongest point about Scott's Emulsion is that you don't have to be sick to get results from it.

It keeps up the athlete's strength, puts fat on thin people, makes a fretful baby happy, brings color to a pale girl's cheeks, and prevents coughs, colds and consumption.

Food in concentrated form for sick and well, young and old, rich and poor.

And it contains no drugs and no alcohol.

WHAT THE EDITOR GETS.

The daily mail of the editors of country weeklies contains pamphlets and circulars of a great and varied nature at this time of the year.

All the law-makers send copies of their pet bills, asking to have them published with favorable comment.

But not one of these savers of the country say, "enclosed find $1.00 to pay cost of composition."

The railroads send papers, circulars and books on their side of the rate question, asking publication, but not one cent accompanys the requests.

People with schemes, with something to sell and others who want to buy, all ask the aid of the editors, but none send a few "simoleons" to help the editors.

From catalogue houses come requests of a like nature; another has a good thing for the farmer; some have plans to bring the nation out of the clutches of the trusts, all ask the country editor to publish for them, gratis, long-winded articles, which will benefit only those asking the favor, and not one has enclosed a bit of the taint that buys bread.

Our waste basket is large but it is taxed daily to hold all the "please publish this with favorable comment" that it receives.

An effort will be made by Minneapolis parties to recover "drowned" logs from the bed of the Mississippi river above Minneapolis. It is said these logs can be marketed at $14 a thousand feet and that lumber of a good quality can be cut from these "drowned" and "deadhead" logs.

If you are constipated, dull, or have a sallow lifeless complexion, try Lax-ets just once to see what they will do for you. Lax-ets are little toothsome Candy tablets—nice to eat, nice in effect. No griping, no pain. Just a gentle laxative effect that is pleasingly desirable. Handy for the vest pocket or purse. Lax-ets meet every desire. Lax-ets come to you in beautiful lithographed metal boxes at 5 cents and 25 cents. Sold by all dealers.

ADVERTISED LETTERS.

If not called for in two weeks these letters will be sent to the dead letter office as prescribed by law. In calling for the above please say "advertised."

To stop a Cold with "Preventics" is safer than to let it run and cure it afterwards. Taken at the "sneeze stage" Preventics will head off all colds and grippe, and perhaps save you from Pneumonia or Bronchitis. Preventics are little toothsome candy cold cure tablets selling in 5-cent and 25-cent boxes. If you are chilly if you begin to sneeze, try Preventics. Sold by all dealers.

Boost the Fire Tournament

PREPARE THIS YOURSELF.

For those who have any form of blood disorder; who want new, rich blood and plenty of it try this:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces.

Shake well in a bottle and take in teaspoonful doses after each meal and at bedtime. Any good pharmacy can supply the ingredients at a small cost.

This is the prescription which when made up, is called "The Vegetable Treatment;" by others, the "Cyclone Blood Purifier." It acts gently and certainly does wonders for some people who are sickly, weak and out of sorts, and is known to relieve serious, long-standing cases of rheumatism and chronic backache quickly. Make some up and try it.

Knocking Down.

A Philadelphia clergyman was talking about the late Sam Small.

"I once heard him speak," he said, "and his humor and eloquence impressed me deeply.

"He had a happy knack of illustration. He wanted, I remember, to illustrate the frailty that is a part of even the best characters, and he told a story about a brave young soldier.

"This soldier," he said, "enlisted in the Spanish-American war and fought like a lion for his country. The firm he had worked for, pleased with the record he was making for himself, told his wife that all the time he was away they would pay half his wages to her.

"Accordingly, at the end of the first week the young woman called at the office and the head of the firm handed her $9.

"She looked at the money and her face clouded over.

"'Nine dollars?' she said.

"'Yes,' said the head of the firm, a little hurt; 'that is just half. I'm sorry you are not satisfied.'

"'It isn't that I'm not satisfied,' said the young woman, 'but all along he's been telling me his pay was only $14 a week. Wait till he gets home! If them Spaniards don't kill him I will.'"

These Lawyers.

Mrs. Langtry, at a dinner in New York, laughed ruefully at the unpleasant and impertinent questions that, under the new customs rules, had been put to her on her landing in America.

"Those questions!" she cried, "coming one after another as they did, and each worse than the one before it, their effect was appalling.

"In their character they reminded me of that lawyer's bill which is sometimes quoted to show what a lawyer at his worst, can be. I don't remember all the bill's items, but two of them were:

"'To waking up in the night and thinking about your case, $7.50.

"'To dining with you after the case was lost, $5.'"

New Lamps for Old.

Johnny's dog, Tige, was a nuisance. His pet theory must have been that all things were created to be destroyed—at least, so his practices indicated. Johnny's folks were anxious to be rid of Tige, and at last they decided to work upon the lad's affections with lucre.

"Johnny," said his father one day "I'll give you $5 if you'll get rid of that dog."

Johnny gasped at the amount, swallowed hard at thought of Tige, and said he would think it over.

The next day at dinner he made the laconic announcement: "Pa, I got rid of Tige."

"Well, I certainly am delighted to hear it," said the father. "Here's your money; you've earned it. How did you get rid of the nuisance?"

"Traded him to Bill Simpkins for two yellow pups," answered Johnny.

One Point Settled Long Ago.

In view of the impending trouble in Europe the people of this country may well congratulate themselves that the fathers settled the relations of church and state at the very beginning of our existence as a nation, and settled it for all-time, for no one wishes to interfere with the conclusion arrived at.

HIS FRIENDLY WAY.

He called me, familyer-like, "Si;"
He ast me about all the folks,
An' he spoke of our village,
Our farms an' their tillage.
As soshul an' pleasant as pie,
As free as you please with his jokes,
You'd 'a' thought he had known me fer years.
He'd be'n postin' hisselt, it appears.

He gin me a slap on the back,
He shook me right hard by the hand
An' his laff wus so hearty
I took to that party—
He throwed me right clear off the track,
But his methuds I now understand.
It wus me that he happened to strike,
But they treat all us fellers alike.

Did he sell me a brick? Well, I s'pose
You might say in a way that he did.
He had plenty of cunning,
But then he was running
Fer office, so everything goes
In the way of a "jolly" or a "kid."

ACTIVE KANSAS TURKEYS.

They Are the Best Gatherers of Grasshoppers Ever Invented.

Machines for gathering grasshoppers have been invented and tried, but the most successful grasshopper gatherer is the turkey. It has the advantage of being a very profitable one, too.

A ranchman in Western Kansas raised turkeys enough last year to keep eighty acres free from damage by this insect pest. Next year this ranchman intends raising turkeys very extensively for this purpose, and nearly all of the neighbors are planning to do the same.

If there were 100 turkeys to each quarter section in this alfalfa belt there would not be enough grasshoppers left to damage any crop. And without considering the good that turkeys do, turkey raising is a profitable industry where insects are so plentiful. After they attain the age of three or four weeks they can obtain their whole living in the fields and cost the farmers nothing until late fall.

Turkey raising promises to become a permanent Kansas industry. The grasshopper with which the farmers have to contend there is not a migrating one, but is native, increasing from year to year. The turkeys, however, range over large fields and thrive on the hoppers.

Titled Evangelists.

The earl and countess of Tankerville have been holding crowded religious meetings in Shropshire, England. Both are much interested in this kind of work. The countess was Miss Leonora Van Marter, an American girl, and the earl spent much of his youth in this country. He is an energetic member of the house of lords, and, like his wife, a great lover of art. They have two children.

Quite a Change in Form.

"You don't care much for social forms?"

"No," answered Mr. Cumrocks. "It's kind of hard to get used to 'R. S. V. P.' when you've been accustomed to 'C. O. D.'"

Justice a Device.

It is universally conceded that nothing short of divine justice can measure the intrinsic guilt of any action or administer punishment which shall exactly be commensurate to the crime. What we call justice is in fact a very rude device which finds its justification in the necessity to protect society.

Kiss Causes Suicide.

Courtship in Spain is regulated by the strictest etiquette. As is well known, a young man is never left alone with his fiancee. Near Malaga a beautiful girl of twenty has just committed suicide by drinking a cup of coffee in which phosphorous had been dissolved. It appears that the girl had been driven to the deed by the adverse comments of neighbors who became aware that she had given her sweetheart a kiss.

HERE'S A WAY TO SAVE DOCTOR BILLS.

Physicians Give Free Advice by Which Parents May Profit.

It was an association of gentlemen, professionally physicians and chemists, all of whom where born in the drug trade, so to speak, and who have been connected with it all their lives, who first gave to the world Castoria, which as every one knows is a pleasant and effective remedy for the ailments of infants and children. It has always been recognized as a meritorious preparation, and its reward as been the greatest popularity ever enjoyed by any remedy ever put upon the market; attained not by flamboyant advertising or appeals to ignorance or vulgar prejudice, but by inherent merit. All physicians recommend it, and many, very many, prescribe it.

Many parents call in the family physician. Many other parents take advantage of what the physician told them when he was first called in consultation. All good family physicians say: "Give the children Castoria." Healthy parents know this remedy of old, for they took it themselves as children. It was more than thirty years ago that Castoria made a place for itself in the household. It bore the signature of Charles H. Fletcher then, as it does today. The signature is its guarantee, which is accepted in thousands of homes where there are children.

Much is printed nowadays about big families. Dr. William J. McCrann, of Omaha, Neb., is the father of one of these much-readabout families. Here is what he says:

"As the father of thirteen children I certainly know something about your great medicine, and aside from my own family experience I have, in my years of practice, found Castoria a popular and efficient remedy in almost every home."

Charles H. Fletcher has received hundreds of letters from prominent physicians who have the same esteem for Castoria that Dr. McCrann has. Not only do these physicians say they use Castoria in their own families, but they prescribe it for their patients. First of all it is a vegetable preparation which assimilates the food and regulates the stomach and bowels. After eating comes sleeping, and Castoria looks out for that, too. It allays feverishness and prevents loss of sleep, and this absolutely without the use of opium, morphine and other baneful narcotic.

Medical journals are reluctant to discuss proprietary medicines. Hall's Journal of Health, however, says: "Our duty is to expose danger and record the means for advancing health. The day for poisoning innocent children through greed or ignorance ought to end. To our knowledge Castoria is a remedy which produces composure and health by regulating the system, not by stupefying it, and our readers are entitled to the information."

One of Hill's Memories.

James J. Hill, president of the Great Northern railroad, takes immense pleasure in recalling that he cut the first stencil and marked the first barrel of flour ever manufactured in Minneapolis. This was in 1859 or 1860, when he was agent for a line of freight steamers running on the Mississippi. The particular stencil was kept by the milling company for years, but at last was destroyed by a fire.

PINE TREE BREAD.

KAMSCHATKANS USE THE INNER BARK OF PINE TREES.

Macerate It in Water and Bake Good, Wholesome Bread—The Pine Keeps the Blood Pure and The Body Healthy.

In Kamschatka the people live in earth-covered pits. Mr. Kennan compares the sound of their language to that of water running out of a narrow-mouth jug. Their bread is made from the inner bark of the Pine Tree, macerated in water and baked without flour. They are a hardy race, the Pine keeping the blood pure and the various organs of the body in a healthy condition. Consumption is unknown among them.

A noted specialist in throat and lung trouble, who established a camp for consumptives in the Pine Woods of Maine, and whose remarkable cures there have attracted great attention from the medical world, says that one-half ounce of the Pure Virgin Oil of Pine, mixed with two ounces of Glycerine and one-half pint of good Whisky and used in teaspoonful doses, will heal and strengthen the lungs, break up a cold in twenty-four hours, and cure any cough that is curable. The ingredients can be secured from any prescription druggist at small cost.

Inquiry at the prescription department of a leading local druggist elicited the information that the Pure Virgin Oil of Pine is put up only in half-ounce vials for dispensing. Each vial is securely sealed in a round wooden case, with engraved wrapper, showing the name—Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure) guaranteed under the Food and Drug act, June 30, 1906. Prepared only by the Leach Chemical Co., Cincinnati, O.—plainly printed thereon. There are many rank imitations of Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure), which are being put out under various names, such as Concentrated Oil of Pine, Pine Balsam, etc. Never accept these as a substitute for the Pure Virgin Oil of Pine, as they will invariably produce nausea and never effect the desired results.

THE FATAL GLOVE.

CHAPTER III.—(CONTINUED.)

He opened the door with one of a bunch of keys which he carried, and noiselessly entered. The gas was turned down low, but a mellow radiance filled the place. A bed stood in one corner, and Sharp advanced toward it. The noise he had made, slight though it was, aroused the occupant, and, as she started up in affright, Arch met the soft, pleading eyes of Margia Harrison son. She spoke to him, not to Sharp.

"Do not let him kill me!"

Sharp laid a rough hand on her shoulder, and put a knife at her throat.

Simultaneously, Arch sprang upon him like a tiger.

"Release that girl," he hissed. "Dare to touch her with the tips of your fingers, and by Heaven I will murder you."

Sharp sprang back with an oath, and at the same moment a pistol shot rang through the house, and Sharp, bathed in blood, fell to the floor. Old Mr. Trevlyn, travel stained and wet, strode into the room.

"I've killed him," he said, in a cracked voice of intense satisfaction. "He didn't catch old Trevlyn napping. I knew well enough they'd be after my diamonds, and I gave up the journey. Margie, child, are the jewels safe?"

She had fallen back on the pillows, pale as death, her white night dress spattered with the blood of the dead robber.

Arch lifted a tiny glove from the carpet, thrust it into his bosom, and, before old Trevlyn could raise a hand to stop him, he had got clear of the premises.

Such a relief as he felt when the cool, fresh air struck his face. He had been saved from overt criminality. God had not permitted him to thus debase himself. Now that his excitement was gone, he saw the heinousness of the sin he had been about to commit in all its deformity.

Let old Trevlyn go! Let him gloat over his diamonds while yet he had the opportunity. He would not despoil him of his treasures, but he could not give up his scheme of vengeance. It should be brought about some other way.

A large reward was offered by Mr. Trevlyn for the apprehension of Sharp's accomplice, but, as no description of his person could be given by any one except Margie, who could not or would not be explicit on that point, he was not secured.

Trevlyn recognized and appreciated her noble generosity in suffering him to go free, for in the one look she had given him on that disgraceful occasion he had felt that she recognized him. But she pitied him enough to let him go free.

Well, he would show her that her confidence was not misplaced. He would deserve her forbearance. He was resolved upon a new life.

He left the saloon, and after many rebuffs succeeded in getting employment as errand boy in a large importing house. The salary was a mere pittance, but it kept him in clothes and coarse food, until one day, about a year after his apprenticeship there, he chanced to save the life of Mr. Belgrade, the senior partner. A gas pipe in the private office of the firm exploded, and the place took fire, and Mr. Belgrade, smothered and helpless, would have perished in the flames, had not Arch, with a bravery few would have expected in a bashful, retiring boy, plunged through the smoke and flame, and bore him to a place of safety.

Mr. Belgrade was a man with a conscience, and, grateful for his life, he rewarded his preserver by a clerkship of importance. The duties of this office he discharged faithfully for three years, when the death of the head clerk left a vacancy, and when Arch was nineteen he received the situation.

Through these three years he had been a close student. Far into the night he pored over his books, and, too proud to go to school, he hired a teacher and was taught privately. At twenty he was quite as well educated as nine-tenths of the young men now turned out by our fashionable colleges.

Rumors of Margie Harrison's triumphs reached him constantly, for Margie was a belle and a beauty now. Her parents were dead, and she had been left to the guardianship of Mr. Trevlyn, at whose house she made her home, and where she reigned a very queen. Old Trevlyn's heart at last found something beside his diamonds to worship, and Margie had it all her own way.

She came into the store of Belgrade & Co. one day, and asked to look at some laces. Trevlyn was the only clerk disengaged, and with a very changeable face he came forward to attend to her. He felt that she would recognize him at once—that she would remember where she had seen him the last time—a house breaker! She held his reputation in her keeping.

His hand trembled as he took down the laces—she glanced at his face. A start of surprise—a conscious, painful blush swept over her face. He dropped the box, and the rich laces fell over his feet.

"Pardon me," he said, hurriedly, and, stooping to pick them up, the little glove he had stolen on that night, and which he always wore in his bosom, fell out, and dropped among the laces.

She picked it up with a little cry.

"The very glove that I lost four years ago! And you are—" She stopped suddenly.

He paled to the lips, but, lifting his head proudly, said:

"Go on. Finish the sentence. I can bear it."

"No, I will not go on. Let the memory die. I knew you then, but you were so young, and had to bear so much among temptations. And the other was a villain. No, I am silent. You are safe."

He stooped and, lifting the border of her shawl, kissed it reverently.

"If I live," he said solemnly, "you will be glad you have been so merciful. Some time I shall hear you say so."

She did not purchase any laces. She went out forgetful of her errand, and Arch was so awkward for the remainder of the day, and committed so many blunders, that his fellow clerks laughed at him unrebuked, and Mr. Belgrade seriously wondered if Trevlyn had not been taking too much champagne.

CHAPTER IV.

MARGIE HARRIson and her guardian sat at breakfast. Mr. Trevlyn showed his years very plainly. He was nearly seventy-five—he looked eighty.

Margie looked very lovely this morning and it was of this the old man was thinking as he glanced at her across the table. She had more than fulfilled the promise of her childhood. The golden hair was chestnut now, and pushed behind her ears in heavy, rippling masses of light and shadow. Her eyes had taken a deeper tone—they were like wells whose depth you could not guess at. Her features were delicately irregular, the forehead low, broad and white; her chin was dimpled as an infant's, and her mouth still ripe and red as a damask rosebud. She wore a pink muslin wrapper, tied with white ribbons, and in her hair drooped a cluster of apple-blossoms.

"Margie, dear," said Mr. Trevlyn, pausing in his work of buttering a muffin. "I want you to look your prettiest tonight. I am going to bring home a friend of mine—one who was also your father's friend—Mr. Linmere. He arrived from Europe today."

Margie's cheek lost a trifle of its peachy bloom. She toyed with her spoon, but did not reply to his remark.

"Did you understand me, child? Mr. Linmere has returned."

"Yes, sir."

"And is coming here tonight. Remember to take extra pains with yourself, Margy, for he has seen all the European beauties, and I do not want my little American flower to be cast in the shade. Will you remember it?"

"Certainly, if you wish it, Mr. Trevlyn."

"Margie!"

"Sir!"

"You are aware that Mr. Linmere is your affianced husband, are you not?"

"I have been told so."

"And yet in the face of that fact—well, of all things, girls do beat me! Thank heaven, I have none of my own," he added testily.

"Girls are better let alone, sir. It is very hard to feel one's self bound to fulfil a contract of this kind."

"Hard! Well, now, I should think it easy. Mr. Linmere is all that any reasonable woman could wish. Not too old, nor yet too young; about forty-five, which is just the age for a man to marry; good looking, intelligent and wealthy—what more could you ask?"

"You forget that I do not love him—that he does not love me."

"Love! tush! Don't let me hear anything about that. I loathe the name. Margie, love ruined my only son! For love he disobeyed me and I disowned him. I have not spoken his name for years! Your father approved of Mr. Linmere, and while you were yet a child you were betrothed. And when your father died, what did you promise him on his deathbed?"

Margie grew white as the ribbons at her throat.

"I promised him that I would try and fulfil his requirements."

"That you would try! Yes. And that was equal to giving an unqualified assent. You know the conditions of the will, I believe?"

"I do. If I marry without your consent under the age of twenty-one, I forfeit my patrimony. And I am nineteen now. And I shall not marry without your consent."

"Margie, you must marry Mr. Linmere. Do not hope to do differently. It is your duty. He has lived single all these years waiting for you. He will be kind to you, and you will be happy. Prepare to receive him with becoming respect."

Mr. Trevlyn considered his duty performed and went out for his customary walk.

At dinner Mr. Linmere arrived. Margie met him with cold composure. He scanned her fair face and almost faultless form with the eye of a connoisseur and congratulated himself on the fortune which was to give him such a bride without the perplexity of a wooing. She was beautiful and attractive, and he had feared she might be ugly, which would have been a dampener on his satisfaction. True, her wealth would have counterbalanced any degree of personal deformity; but Mr. Paul Linmere admired beauty, and liked to have pretty things around him.

To tell the truth, he was sadly in need of money. It was fortunate that his old friend, Mr. Harrison, Margie's dead father, had taken it into his head to plight his daughter's troth to him while she was yet a child. Mr. Harrison had been an eccentric man, and from the fact that in many points of religious belief he and Mr. Paul Linmere agreed (for both were miserable skeptics), he valued him above all other men, and thought his daughter's happiness would be secured by the union he had planned.

Linmere had been abroad several years, and he had led a very reckless, dissipated life. Luxurious by nature, lacking in moral rectitude, and having wealth at his command, he indulged himself unrestrained, and when at last he left the gay French capital and returned to America, his whole fortune, with the exception of a few thousands, was dissipated. So he needed a rich wife sorely, and was not disposed to defer his happiness.

He met Margie with empressement, and bowed his tall head to kiss the white hand she extended to him. She drew it away coldly—something about the man made her shrink from him.

"I am so happy to meet you again, Margie, and after ten years of separation! I have thought so much and so often of you."

"Thank you, Mr. Linmere."

"Will you not call me Paul?" he asked, in a subdued voice, letting his dangerous eyes, full of light and softness, rest on her.

An expression of haughty surprise swept her face. She drew back a pace.

"I am not accustomed to address gentlemen—mere acquaintances—by their Christian names, sir."

"But in this case, Margie? Surely the relations existing between us will admit of such a familiarity," he said, seating himself, while she remained standing coldly by.

"There are no relations existing between us at present, Mr. Linmere," she answered haughtily; "and if, in obedience to the wishes of the dead, we should ever become connected in name, I beg leave to assure you in the beginning that you will always be Mr. Linmere to me."

A flush of anger mounted to his cheek; he set his teeth, but outwardly he was calm and subdued. Anger, just at present, was impolitic.

"I hope to win your love, Margie; I trust I shall," he answered, sadly enough to have aroused almost any woman's pity; but some subtle instinct told Margie he was false to the core.

But all through the evening he was affable and complaisant and forbearing. She made no attempt to conceal her dislike for him. Concealments were not familiar to Margie's nature. She was frank and open as the day.

Mr. Linmere's fascinations were many and varied. He had a great deal of adaptation, and made himself agreeable to every one. He had traveled extensively, was a close observer, and had a retentive memory. Mr. Trevlyn was charmed with him. So was Alexandrine Lee, a friend of Margie's, a rival belle, who accidentally (?) dropped in to spend the evening.

Mr. Linmere played and sang with exquisite taste and skill—he was a complete master of the art, and, in spite of herself, Margie listened to him with a delight that was almost fascination, but which subsided the moment the melody ceased.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

THIEVES AT THE OPERA.

Immaculately Dressed and Attended by Beautiful Women.

"Strange as it may seem," said one of Chief O'Brien's new detectives, as he lounged against a pillar in front of the Metropolitan opera house, talking to a New York Herald man, "New York thieves of the higher class have a weakness for grand opera, both for business and pleasure. You doubtless remember when Inspector McLaughlin walked down the aisle two years ago and tapped a woman on the shoulder. She was a notorious thief and she followed him without a word. Since then several thieves have been arrested in the lobby and around the entrance and several have even got past us and have sat out the performance. Look at this. It is a sample of the work done by the opera house thieves."

The detective pulled from his pocket a crumpled advertisement. It was as follows:

"If blue kersey overcoat taken from dress circle of Metropolitan opera house Monday night is returned, $25 will be paid and no questions asked."

"I was one of the men detailed here on the opening night," continued the detective. "Personally, I hustled several thieves away; but as there was no charge against them beyond their general bad character they could not be arrested.

"After the opera was over, I stood just at the door to watch the crowd coming out. What was my surprise to see one of the best-known thieves in New York come out with a beautifully dressed woman on his arm. She wore a long pink and ermine opera cloak and big diamonds and his crush hat was simply immense. He looked at me coolly, handed the woman into a carriage and whirled away.

"I saw him next day in Sixth avenue and called to him: 'What do you want?' he inquired. 'There is nothing against me. Hasn't a man a right to enjoy himself?' I warned him against enjoying himself around the Metropolitan opera house, and let him go. There are very many diamonds around the Metropolitan and they are a great temptation to the average thief."

Criticism is an effective form of vice.

TO BEAUTIFY THE CITY.

Improvements that Are Planned at the National Capital.

Two distinct movements are now under way for the improvement of the capital city of this republic. One of these is for the purpose of gradually doing away with the slums and insanitary conditions which are to be found in Washington's back alleys. While hardly more than a beginning has been accomplished, the work of removing dilapidated, unwholesome shacks and hovels seem at least to be making some progress. It is to be hoped that it can be pushed more rapidly in the future.

The other scheme consists of a plan to appropriate ten millions to purchase outright and devote to governmental uses a tract of some 2,000,000 square feet lying below Pennsylvania avenue and between the capitol grounds and the White House. It is pointed out that many of the department buildings are overcrowded; that the government is expending large Sums in rent for space in inadequate and insecure structures, and that the ground which it is desired to buy would furnish abundant room on which to erect stately public buildings in architectural harmony. The execution of this policy would undoubtedly add signally to the impressiveness of the capital. It is also asserted, apparently with some reason, that it would be far cheaper to buy it now than to wait until it is imperatively required, when its present owners will be pretty sure to put prices up.

In any event, congress, while it should not sanction waste or extravagance, should deal with the needs of Washington in a spirit of judicious liberality, says the Philadelphia Bulletin. The historic community on the Potomac has superb facilities for development into a center worthy in all respects of its political status. Niggardly economy regarding its requirements would be short sighted and foolish.

POWER OF COUNTRY PRESS.

Utterances Carry Much Weight at Washington.

"The power of the country press in Washington surprises me," said a middle west congressman last winter. "During my two terms I have been impressed with it constantly. I doubt if there is a single calm utterance in any paper in the United States that does not carry some weight in Washington among the members of congress. You might think that what some little country editor says does not amount to anything, but it means a great deal more than most people realize. When the country editor, who is looking after nothing but the county printing, gives expression to some rational idea about a national question, the man off here in congress knows that it comes from the grass roots. The lobby, the big railroad lawyers and that class of people realize the power of the press, but they hate it. I have heard them talk about it and shake their heads and say: 'Too much power there!' The press is more powerful than money."

This was not said in flattery, but because he had seen on congressmen's desks the heaps of country weeklies, and he knew how closely they were read, writes Charles M Harger, in the Atlantic. The smallest editorial paragraph tells the politician of the condition in that paper's community, for he knows that it is put there because the editor has gathered the idea from some one whom he trusts as a leader—and the politician knows approximately who that leader is. So the country editor often exerts a power of which he knows little.

An Exciting Visit.

Swapping stories is a frequent amusement with actors in their dressing rooms at the theater, during waits in the play between acts. Henry Kolker, of "The Three of Us" company, told the following story the other night of an old colored woman he knew down in Virginia, who made her first and only trip to Washington.

"I'se been mighty troubled, Mr. Kolker, since you was heah," she said. "I'se been to Wash'ton. Der railroad had a 'scursion. Took you dar' an' back fo' a dollah. I gets to Wash'ton all right, 'bout 'leven o'clock. It's jes' gran'."

"What did you do, auntie, in Washington? I suppose you saw the capitol and the treasury building, where all of Uncle Sam's money is kept," asked Mr. Kolker.

"Didn't see as much as I mighter count de crowds. I jes' staid in de depo' on er bench 'till tree o'clock, when it wuz time to go home," she said.

Darkey's Second Thought.

Senator Depew's automobile ran into a dirt cart at Pennsylvania avenue and Third street, at Washington, and the darkey driving the cart was thrown to the street.

"No, suh, I ain't hurt," the darkey said, clambering back on the seat of his dirt cart. "I ain't hurt a bit."

"Well, if there's any trouble, notify Senator Depew," some one in the automobile said to the darkey.

"Lordy! Lordy! I'se jest about dead," the driver yelled on learning the ownership of the motor car. "I'se got pains in mah haid and back something dreadful, and I'se got a misery in mah side what's awful."

He complained so much after hearing that Senator Depew owned the motor car that a policeman called an ambulance and sent him to the hospital.

Wanted All That Was Coming.

"Senator, do you intend to deny the accusation that you are a grafter?"

"Certainly not," replied Senator Badger emphatically. "I propose to have all the titles that go with my office."

The revelations regarding fraudulent paint materials which have been made by the Agricultural Experiment Station of Fargo, N. D., and published by Prof. E. F. Ladd, state commissioner, have occasioned almost as much of a sensation as the exposure of adulteration in food products did when the latter first began to appear. It has been shown that kegs marked "Pure White Lead" often contain other substances such as chalk, barytes, silica, etc., and that oil supposed to be linseed often contains petroleum adulterants, to say nothing of water in large proportions. Sometimes, so-called "White Leads" contain not an iota of genuine White Lead.

The farmer is a large user of paint. No one is more interested than he is, that the label should enable him to get what he supposes he is paying for. There should be a law in every state requiring that all paint packages be labeled exactly according to their contents. That would enable every paint buyer to buy intelligently.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a Specific For Anaemia and a Safe Family Medicine.

When the body becomes run down, either as a result of overwork, worry or a severe illness, an examination of the blood would show it to be weak and watery. This condition is called anaemic, which is the medical term for "bloodless." The common symptoms are paleness of the lips, gums and cheeks, shortness of breath and palpitation of the heart after the slightest exertion, dull eyes and loss of appetite.

Mr. Louis L. Clark, a painter, of 19 Lincoln Place, Plainfield, N. J., says: "Last May I was obliged to undergo an operation for appendicitis and while the operation in itself was successful, I did not recover my strength and health. I was confined to my bed for over a month and was under the doctor's care. When I was able to get up my legs were so weak and unsteady that I could only walk with a cane with difficulty.

"I was getting no better and could not think of going back to work. I was discouraged, when a neighbor told me that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills had cured her and advised me to try them. I began taking them about the middle of June and soon felt so much better that I kept on and was cured.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have cured rheumatism, chlorosis, after-effects of the grip and fevers, and, as the health of the nerves depends upon the purity of the blood, they are invaluable in neuralgia, nervous debility, sleeplessness, dizziness and even locomotor ataxia and paralysis.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

PALACES GOING UP

UNCLE SAM BUILDING TWO HOTELS FOR STATESMEN.

White Marble Apartment Houses, One for Senators and One for Congressmen, Will Soon be Ready for Occupation.

Uncle Sam is building two apartment houses in Washington. They will be the most magnificent structures of their kind in this country, and will cost $2,500,000 apiece. Exclusively for use by congressmen, they will be to all intents and purposes detached wings of the capitol, though separated from the latter by several hundred feet. One of them will be occupied by senators and the other by representatives.

These official "congressional flats," as they might be called, will be devoted wholly to the personal convenience and comfort of the legislative occupants, who will be surrounded by every imaginable luxury. In effect, they will be huge hotels, each of them occupying more ground than the Waldorf-Astoria in New York, though not so high; and the dining rooms will be on a great scale and very handsome—though "guests" will be at liberty to have their meals served in their rooms by messengers on the government pay roll and in uniform, if they so desire. Also, there will be magnificent barber shops; and, indeed, the only regular hotel feature lacking will be bedrooms, all of the apartments being intended for daytime use merely—a fact, which, nevertheless, will not bar occupants from utilizing their quarters for sleeping purposes if they wish.

The two buildings, which are to be of white marble, will be exactly alike in respect to their exterior, and will not differ much so far as their interior is concerned. Flanking the capitol at either end, they will form with the latter a harmonious architectural whole, the great dome dominating the group as the central feature. It would suffice, then, to give a description of one, in order to convey a satisfactory idea of both—save for one or two differences, relating particularly to the number of rooms. In the southern flats, allotted to the lower house, there will be 410 rooms—one for each representative. On the other hand, in the northern flats the amount of space (comprising the whole of three floors) will be occupied by 99 apartments.

Now, at the present time there are in the house 391 members and delegates; so that 19 rooms will be left over for a future margin. In the senate there are 90, so that quarters for eight aditional senators from possible future states will be available. But, it will be observed, the smaller number of senators makes it practicable to supply them with much more commodious qaurters and, while each representative will have only one room, there will be for each senator an apartment in the proper sense of the word, comprising a room for himself, a slightly smaller room for his secretary, and a bathroom.

These senatorial apartments will be very handsomely decorated and furnished. A small army of uniformed messengers will be at hand to furnish the requisite service, and, with private staircases and private elevators for the exclusive use of the wearers of the toga, the whole outfit will be of the most comfortable, not to say luxurious description. Furnished private apartments in a white marble palace, with rent and all sorts of incidentals paid for by the government, are not by any means to be sneezed at, so to speak.

In earlier days, when more simple manners prevailed, congressmen were content to rub along with fewer comforts and conveniences. Though the capitol was a much smaller building than it is to-day, the space it afforded was made to serve for committee rooms and all other legislative purposes. But congress, of course, has grown numerically, and, though the capitol has been likewise greatly expanded, the wants of members of both houses have multiplied. For a good many years past every senator has insisted upon having his private suite, and, the committee rooms in the senate wing being too few, the Maltby building acress the street, has been occupied for the purpose.

Meanwhile it has seemed to many representatives that they were not getting their share of the pie, as it were, and so they have insistently pushed a movement for the erection of a building outside, which would contain suitable quarters for themselves. Thus it was that eventually $5,000,000 was appropriated to put up the two great apartment houses here described—the senate naturally insisting that the upper house should not be left out.

Didn't Know Mr. Mudd.

A long, lank, loosely built stranger strolled into the lobby of the National the other day. After looking around he walked up to the desk.

"Is Mr. Mudd in?" he asked the clerk.

"Mr. Mudd? Not acquainted with the gentleman."

"Do I understand you to say you don't know Sydney Mudd?"

"No; who is he?"

This was too much for the stranger. He regarded the clerk in silence for a moment and then turned on his heel and left the hotel.

"That man," said the clerk, "lives over in Prince George county, Md. Everybody over there knows 'Marse Sydney,' and whenever a person says he doesn't know him it makes the loyal Marylander mad."—Washington Post.

Gave Himself Away.

"I've made a discovery about Mrs. Blockaway's husband," said Mrs. Kawner. "At some time in his life he was a professional cook."

"How do you know?" asked Mrs Crossway.

"I happened in there yesterday and found him getting the dinner himself. The girl had left and his wife was sick. He was putting on the table a lot of things he had got at the delicatessen store, and he was doing it properly. If he had been just an ordinary husband, you know, he would have put them all on in the original packages."

BABY TORTURED BY ITCHING.

Rash Covered Face and Feet—Would Cry Until Tired Out—Speedy Cure by Cuticura.

"My baby was about nine months old when she had rash on her face and feet. Her feet seemed to irritate her most, especially nights. They would cause her to be broken in her rest, and sometimes she would cry until she was tired out. I had always used Cuticura Soap myself, and had heard of so many cures by the Cuticura Remedies that I thought I would give them a trial. The improvement was noticeable in a few hours, and before I had used one box of the Cuticura Ointment her feet were well and have never troubled her since. I also used it to remove what is known as "cradle cap" from her head, and it worked like a charm, as it cleansed and healed the scalp at the same time. Now I keep Cuticura Ointment on hand in case of any little rash or insect bites, as it takes out the inflammation at once. Perhaps this may be the means of helping other suffering babies. One of the Important Duties of Physicians and the Well-Informed of the World is to learn as to the relative standing and reliability of the leading manufacturers of medicinal agents, as the most eminent physicians are the most careful as to the uniform quality and perfect purity of remedies prescribed by them, and it is well known to physicians and the Well-Informed generally that the California Fig Syrup Co., by reason of its correct methods and perfect equipment and the ethical character of its product has attained to the high standing in scientific and commercial circles which is accorded to successful and reliable houses only, and, therefore, that the name of the Company has become a guarantee of the excellence of its remedy.

TRUTH AND QUALITY

appeal to the Well-Informed in every walk of life and are essential to permanent success and creditable standing, therefore we wish to call the attention of all who would enjoy good health, with its blessings, to the fact that it involves the question of right living with all the term implies. With proper knowledge of what is best each hour of recreation, of enjoyment, of contemplation and of effort may be made to contribute to that end and the use of medicines dispensed with generally to great advantage, but as in many instances a simple, wholesome remedy may be invaluable if taken at the proper time, the California Fig Syrup Co. feels that it is alike important to present truthfully the subject and to supply the one perfect laxative remedy which has won the appoval of physicians and the world-wide acceptance of the Well-Informed because of the excellence of the combination, known to all, and the original method of manufacture, which is known to the California Fig Syrup Co. only.

This valuable remedy has been long and favorably known under the name of—Syrup of Figs—and has attained to world-wide acceptance as the most excellent of family laxatives, and as its pure laxative principles, obtained from Senna, are well known to physicians and the Well-Informed of the world to be the best of natural laxatives, we have adopted the more elaborate name of—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna—as more fully descriptive of the remedy, but doubtless it will always be called for by the shorter name of Syrup of Figs—and to get its beneficial effects always note, when purchasing, the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—plainly printed on the front of every package, whether you simply call for—Syrup of Figs—or by the full name—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna—as—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna—is the one laxative remedy manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. and the same heretofore known by the name—Syrup of Figs—which has given satisfaction to millions. The genuine is for sale by all leading druggists throughout the United States in original packages of one size only, the regular price of which is fifty cents per bottle.

Every bottle is sold under the general guarantee of the Company, filed with the Secretary of Agriculture, at Washington, D. C., that the remedy is not adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of the Food and Drugs Act, June 30th, 1906.

RHEUMATISM
CAN NOT BE RUBBED AWAY

It is perfectly natural to rub the spot that hurts, and when the muscles, nerves, joints and bones are throbbing and twitching with the pains of Rheumatism the sufferer is apt to turn to the liniment bottle, or some other external application, in an effort to get relief from the disease, by producing counter-irritation on the flesh. Such treatment will quiet the pain temporarily, but can have no direct curative effect on the real disease because it does not reach the blood, where the cause is located. Rheumatism is more than skin deep—it is rooted and grounded in the blood and can only be reached by constitutional treatment—IT CANNOT BE RUBBED AWAY. Rheumatism is due to an excess of uric acid in the blood, brought about by the accumulation in the system of refuse matter which the natural avenues of bodily waste, the Bowels and Kidneys, have failed to carry off. This refuse matter, coming in contact with the different acids of the body, forms uric acid which is absorbed into the blood and distributed to all parts of the body, and Rheumatism gets possession of the system. The aches and pains are only symptoms, and though they may be scattered or relieved for a time by surface treatment, they will reappear at the first exposure to cold or dampness, or after an attack of indigestion or other irregularity. Rheumatism can never be permanently cured while the circulation remains saturated with irritating, pain-producing uric acid poison. The disease will shift from muscle to muscle or joint to joint, settling on the nerves, causing inflammation and swelling and such terrible pains that the nervous system is often shattered, the health undermined, and perhaps the patient becomes deformed and crippled for life. S. S. S. thoroughly cleanses the blood and renovates the circulation by neutralizing the acids and expelling all foreign matter from the system. It warms and invigorates the blood so that instead of a weak, sour stream, constantly depositing acrid and corrosive matter in the muscles, nerves, joints and bones, the body is fed and nourished by rich, health-sustaining blood which completely and permanently cures Rheumatism. S. S. S. is composed of both purifying and tonic properties—just what is needed in every case of Rheumatism. It contains no potash, alkali or other mineral ingredient, but is made entirely of purifying, healing extracts and juices of roots, herbs and barks. If you are suffering from Rheumatism do not waste valuable time trying to rub a blood disease away, but begin the use of S. S. S. and write us about your case and our physicians will give you any information or advice desired free of charge and will send our special treatise on Rheumatism.

Rare Asiatic Finds.

Dr. von Lecoq, who has been traveling in the most remote parts of Central Asia on a scientific mission with which he was charged by the Prussian government, has arrived at the capital of Cashmere with an important collection of articles of archeological interest. This collection includes several paintings and a number of manuscripts in ten different languages, one in a wholly unknown tongue. It is considered that this is one of the most important archeological finds since the days of Sir Henry Rawlinson and Sir Austin Lavard.

Doubtful Evidence.

A certain elector in a Western constituency, who takes a keen interest in politics, has been twice confined in a lunatic asylum. On each occasion when discharged from durance he obtained a formal written statement from the proper authority declaring that he was once more in his right demand. At a recent political meeting he was extremely excited, and constantly interrupted the speakers. The chairman attempted to bring him to order by gentle means, which failed, and then, by stern and dignified reproof, which also failed. At last the chairman lost his patience.

"Look here, sir," he said to the excited one, "you're behaving more like a madman than an elector!"

"Madman!" repeated the elector, with crushing scorn. "I've got two certificates of sanity in my pocket, and I'll bet you what you like you haven't got one!"

The Soldier's Wedding.

Among the many good stories in Sir Evelyn Wood's autobiography is one concerning Gen. Sir Alfred Horsford, who believed in a celibate army. When in command of a battalion of the Rifle brigade, a soldier sought his permission to marry, as he had two good conduct badges and £5 in the savings bank.

"Well, go away," said Sir Alfred, "and if you come back this day year in the same mind you shall marry. I'll keep the vacancy."

On the anniversary the soldier repeated his request.

"But do you really, after a year, want to marry?"

"Yes, sir; very much."

"Sergeant major, take his name down. Yes, you may marry. I never believed there was so much constancy in man or woman. Right face; quick march!"

As the man left the room, turning his head, he said: "Thank you, sir; but it isn't the same woman."

LOCAL FIREMEN HOLD MEETING

Meeting of the Fire Department Saturday Evening Was Long and Interesting.

Saturday evening the local fire department held its regular monthly meeting at the city hall. The attendance was large and there was much business to be done.

First came the membership proposition and six new members were taken into the department. William Erickson, Bert LaFreniere, Verne and Lee Heary, Ernest Toupin and and Clem Brunelle. These young men will all make good material for the running team. After a discussion over honorary membership the other business was attended to.

The most important subject was the coming firemen's tournament to be held here in June. The old gymnasium room in the Zaiser building was rented by the department for the members of the running team so that they can get into condition for the tournament. New running suits shoes and coats and hose coupling were also mentioned as needed for the tournament. The subject of an electrical display was also discussed. Committees were appointed for the looking after the fixing of a suitable track on which to run the races, and for a suitable grandstand.

The problem of taking care of the many visitors who will undoubtedly come to our town at that time was also discussed and a committee was appointed to get ladies of the different churches to serve meals during the tournament as it is expected that at least 3,000 visitors will be here.

The boys realize that they have a big task on hand and are buckling down to it in earnest and are determined to make the tournament one of the biggest and most successful ever held in Northern Minnesota. In order to do this they must have the unanimous and hearty support of the people, so Boost the Fire Tournament.

COURT WILL HEAR PETITIONS.

Eight Years Ago In Red Lake Falls

Clippings From the Courier of the Week of March 9, 1899.

Sunday morning at 2:30 o'clock our citizens were aroused by the fire alarm and rushing into the streets found flames pouring into the new, partially completed Horwitz building on Main street. The fire had apparently started on the ground floor and worked its way up the wall through the second story to the roof. The small chemical apparatus was quickly brought out, a bucket brigade organized, and the fire boys worked with a will. By hard, effective work, and, owing to the green lumber in the building, the fire was soon quenched, and did no greater damage than to burn out the floor and the north wall of the building of 6 or 8 feet all the way up. Great credit is due to the firemen, who, under trying circumstanes, never lost their heads for a moment, but worked steadily on until their purpose was accomplished.

A large crowd of young folks of this city went to the home of Miss Birdie Dwyer Thursday evening last to enjoy a few of the passing hours. The principal event of the evening was the candy pull of which all partook with the greatest of pleasure and the cleanest of hands. George Hennings was said to have the cleanest hands and William Taylor the dirtiest, but others say that is not quite right, as they also say some are "cranky" and others "cute." Those present were Rachel Taylor, Ellie Hamry, Helen Schaefer, Lulu Schrieter, Alice Buse, Agnes and Margie Rogers, Bessie Hunt, Orban Hamry, Scott Hall, Abner Fletcher, Fritz Zaiser, George and Emil Hennings, Jim Hill and Top Taylor.

A Denver newspaper man was frozen to death in a cemetery. Well, any editor who will nose around a graveyard to get the news of the last century ought to freeze. He'll thaw out soon enough on the other side of the Jordan.

Mrs. E. F. Marshall returned from Minneapolis Saturday afternoon.

Marcus Johnson arrived from St. Paul on Tuesday to look after business interests.

The new fire bell arrived Tuesday, and will be put in place in the tower of the City Hall next week.

The Misses Lillie and Alice Buse went to Thief River Falls yesterday to make a short visit with friends.

The wiring of the Grand View Hotel was completed this week and the hotel is now lighted by electricity throughout.

The interior of the First State bank is now ornamented by a fine moose head and a deer head prepared for the bank by Sam Cheeley, taxidermist of Thief River Falls.

We have been experiencing March weather during the past week, high winds, freezing up and thaws being some of the changes. Last Saturday morning it was 35 degrees below zero. Yesterday and today a big thaw is on which is rapidly ruining the sleighing.

The Courier's fame as a newspaper is widespread. One of our subscribers writes us: "I am very much pleased to see so spicy a newspaper at Red Lake Falls. Please send me half a dozen copies of your last issue, as I wish to send some of my friends in Wisconsin and Missouri and other points."

ALL RECORDS BROKEN.

Cow Yields 5,326 Pounds of Milk and 260 Pounds of Butter in 60 Days.

In a sixty-day test, just completed at Fond du Lac, Wis., under the personal supervision of a representative of the Wisconsin Experiment association, a Holstein-Friesian cow, owned by W. J. Gillett, of that city, has broken the world's butter record by forty pounds. The official test shows 5,326.7 pounds of milk and 260.5 pounds of butter. The cow gave birth to a calf Dec. 19, and the test was commenced on the fifth day of her period of lactation. The test was continued for sixty-four days, during which period every milking was watched, the quantity of milk weighed, and samples taken and tested by a representative of the experiment station.

The phenomenal yield was such that Supt. M. H. Gardner, of the advanced registry, ordered two separate re-tests, the first of which was for twenty-four hours and the second forty-eight hours, during which time additional representatives were sent from the experiment station. The cow was under constant supervison day and night to preclude any possibility of fraud. The best day in milk was 106 pounds. The best day in butter was 5.74 pounds.

SEMI-CENTENNIAL FUND.

Elmer E. Adams, member of the legislature from Fergus Falls has introduced a bill in the house appropriating $1,300,000 for a "Semi-Centennial Bridge Fund" to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the admission of the State of Minnesota into the Union. Various schemes have been proposed for celebrating the coming anniversary, the principal one being the holding of a six weeks' exposition at the State Fair grounds for which a strong lobby is at work to have the legislature appropriate $1,000,000. The Memorial which Mr. Adams proposes is certainly the most practical and it is one which will appeal to the people of every county in the state for everywhere there is need of permanent bridges, and the townships are unable to build them unaided. The bill provides for issuing certificates of indebtedness by the state for $1,500,000 bearing 4 per cent interest and these are to be paid off at the rate of $100,000 a year. This is the plan on which the $4,000,000 capitol was built and the one on which it was proposed to raise $1,000,000 for the "expanded" State Fair and the $1,500,00 for the capitol approaches. The bill divides the $1,500,000 among the counties of the state according to their size and needs and is to be used in building iron, stone and concrete bridges, and on each bridge there is to be a tablet of iron which shall read "Erected in 1908 in Commemoration of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Admission of Minnesota into the Union." The money when paid to to the counties will be apportioned by the county boards, which will determine what proportion of the cost of the bridge shall be provided by the township or village and what proportion shall be paid out of the Semi-Centennial fund. Under the provisions of the bill Red Lake county will receive $10,000.

For Catarrh, let me send you free, just to prove merit, a trial size box of Dr. Shoop's Catarrh Remedy. It is a snow white, creamy, healing antiseptic balm that gives instant relief to Catarrh of the nose and throat. Make the free test and see. Address Dr. Shoop, Racine, Wis. Large jars 50 cents. Sold by all dealers.

NEW LAW FOR PENSIONERS

Veterans of the Civil and Mexican Wars to Receive an Increase of Pension According to Age.

A new pension law, which, when it has been approved by the president will become effective, will increase the pension pay of veterans who served ninety days in either the Civil or Mexican war. The pensioner must file a new application under the following rules:

1. It is absolutely useless to file applications before the bill shall have been approved by the president. A host of applications are now coming into the Pension Bureau which are of no value and no effect whatever. They will not be considered by the Bureau. No application will be accepted or placed on file except it has been made and dated subsequent to the approval of the bill.

2. A formal application is now required for every change of grade. That is, a man pensioned under the old law at a less rate than provided in the schedule: that is, supposing that he is 70 years old and drawing $12 for disability, can receive $15 if he had 90 days service or more, but he must make application under the new law. The pension agent has no authority to change the rate of a pensioner until after the action of the Pension Bureau and the receipt from it of a direction to record a change.

3. The pension is in no instance an addition to any other pension by general law or special act. A pensioner, who is now receiving $6 under the general law, and who has arrived at the age of 65, may have his pension increased to $12 a month but he must make application therefor.

4. No pension attorney or other person is entitled to any fee for preparing application and forwarding it to the Pension Bureau.

5. The Commissioner of Pensions has in preparation a proper blank form of an application for the use of those desiring to take advantage of provisions of the new law it is hoped to have the same ready for distribution within a few days. In the meantime all requests for blank applications will be filled for immediate answer when the blanks shall be printed. Those making requests for blanks should state service and term of service, present age, and if pensioned. The law under which pensioned, and the monthly rate received; also with with name and Post Office address so plainly written that there can be no mistake made in forwarding the blanks. Address all letters to the Commissioner of Pensions, Washington, D.C.

The local camp of the Modern Woodmen of America gave a Whist Smoke social at their hall Wednesday evening. A large number attended. Not only whist was played, but all other games well known to those who play cards as a pastime. Those members who attended had a nice smoke and spent a very pleasant evening.

Calla Lily Farm.

What is probably the largest calla lily farm in the world is located in California. There is one fifty-acre field in Ventura county devoted exclusively to the cultivation of these flowers. They are planted in long, narrow rows and are cultivated by means of plows and hoes, just like corn or potatoes. The lilies attain a very large size and are, perhaps, the most beautiful specimens of their kind to be found in the world. In beers as in everything else, there is always one that is better than the rest. The most rigid test will prove to you the superiority of golden grain belt beer. MIX THIS AT HOME.

The following simple home-made mixture is said to readily relieve and overcome any form of Rheumatism by forcing the kidneys to filter from the blood and system all the uric acid and poisonous waste matter, relieving at once such symptoms as backache, weak kidneys and bladder and blood diseases.

Try it, as it doesn't cost much to make, and is said to be absolutely harmless to the stomach.

Get the following harmless ingredients from any good pharmacy: Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Mix by shaking well in a bottle, and take a teaspoonful after each meal and again at bedtime.

This mixture is said to give prompt relief, and there are very few cases of Rheumatism and Kidney troubles it will fail to cure permanently.

These are all harmless, every-day drugs, and your druggist should keep them in the prescription department; if not, have him order them from the wholesale drug houses for you, rather than fail to use this, if you are afflicted.

Faster and faster the pace is set,
By people of action, vim and get,
So if at the finish you would be,
Take Hollister's Rocky Mountain Tea. A. L. Reichert.

FURTHER TIME ALLOWED.

Homesteaders Are Granted an Extension of Time In Which to Establish Residence on Their Land.

By the passage of a joint resolution, Congress has come to the rescue of settlers who have been hard hit by the recent orders of President Roosevelt. The homesteader who has recently filed on the land is granted an extension of four and one-half months' time in which to establish his residence thereon. The resolution reads as follows:

"That all persons who made homestead entry in the states of North Dakota, South Dakota, Idaho, Minnesota, Montana, Washington and Wyoming, where the period in which they were, or are, required by law to make entry under such declaratory statement or establish residence, expired or expires, after December 1st, 1906, are hereby granted until May 15, 1907, within which to make such entry or actual settlement and establish residence upon the lands so entered by them. Provided, that this extension of time shall not shorten either the period of commutation or of actual residence under the homestead law."

High School Notes

[Edited by Miss Freda Itner.]

March! What an inspiriting word it is, and what an inspiriting month as well—just cold and breezy enough to make us feel like moving right along, yet with its lengthening golden days that tell of coming summer joy. There's only three months more: Forward, March!

The Seniors have at last decided on their class play which will be "The Sweet Girl Graduates." They met for the first time on Thursday evening to read their parts. Fuller particulars will be given later. Be on watch for them—for the Seniors of '07 intend to give a play worthy of attention.

Edna Swanson was absent Monday on account of illness.

Who winds the watch? That makes the girls smile so.

The geometry class has finished the advance in Plane Geometry.

Wonder what became of the German petition?

Oscar Helm, Theo. St-nett and Theodore Garceau have joined the Arithmetic class.

Albany Deforge has returned to school to resume his studies.

There was a debate in the Civics Class Tuesday. The question was "Free Trade and protection."

Always be willing to meet anyone half way, even if it is hard.

Have you noticed how beautifully the Senior line marches? They are surely not setting the rest of us a very good example to follow.

There are many cases of absence in the lower grades. It is due to the measles which seems to have attacked so many of the younger ones.

It seems hard to convince a certain Senior girl that anyone would give a dollar for her picture.

Tablets of all sizes and kinds for the school children can be had at the Courier office.

WEDDED AT THIEF RIVER FALLS.

Anton I. Anderson, formerly of Thief River Falls, but now employed by the Thief River Lumber company at Prince Albert, Can., was married to Miss Edith Jane Pritchard, of Thief River Falls, Wednesday. The bride is the daughter of W. W. Pritchard, president of the First National bank, and a very popular young lady. The groom also is very popular in Thief River Falls.

Rheumatism

I have found a tried and tested cure for Rheumatism! Not a remedy that will straighten the distorted limbs of chronic cripples, nor turn bony growths back to flesh again. That is impossible. But I can now surely kill the pains and pangs of this deplorable disease.

In Germany—with a Chemist in the City of Darmstadt—I found the last ingredient with which Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic Remedy was made a perfected, dependable prescription. Without that last ingredient, I successfully treated many, many cases of Rheumatism; but now, at last, it uniformly cures all curable cases of this heretofore much dreaded disease. Those sand-like granular wastes, found in Rheumatic Blood, seem to dissolve and pass away under the action of this remedy as freely as does sugar when added to pure water. And then, when dissolved, these poisonous wastes freely pass from the system, and the cause of Rheumatism is gone forever. There is now no real need—no actual excuse to suffer longer without help. We sell, and in confidence recommend

Rheumatic Remedy

MRS. THAW MAKES TWO GOOD POINTS

GIVEN CHANCE TO EXPLAIN SOME THINGS WHICH SEEMED AGAINST HER.

LIVED ON BOUNTY OF WHITE

DISTRICT ATTORNEY PRIES INTO PAST LIFE OF THE DEFENDANT'S WIFE.

New York, Feb. 22.—In continuing his cross-examination of Mrs. Evelyn Nesbit Thaw yesterday at the trial of her husband District Attorney Jerome brought out the fact that in 1902 Stanford White deposited $1,350 with a New York trust company with instructions that it should be paid to the Nesbit girl at the rate of $25 a week. Mrs. Thaw frankly admitted receiving checks from the trust company, but she would not admit that there was a provision that she should receive the money only when out of employment. The prosecutor spent nearly the entire afternoon in trying to make Mrs. Thaw admit that this was true, but as often and in as many ways as he put the question to her, she gave the one answer: "I don't remember."

Her Feelings Not Spared.

Mr. Jerome indicated early that he had no disposition to spare Mrs. Thaw's feelings. He interrogated her pointedly as to her men acquaintances of the past. He laid especial stress upon her acquaintanceship with James A. Garland, who figured for the first time in the case. Mrs. Thaw said she knew Garland before she met White.

"Weren't you named as co-respondent in the Garland divorce case?" asked Mr. Jerome.

Mrs. Thaw was shaking her head when Mr. Delmas sprang to his feet with an objection. Justice Fitzgerald overruled the objection, but Mr. Jerome withdrew the question.

Never Posed in Nude.

Mr. Jerome questioned the witness about her manner of posing for artists and brought from her a denial that she ever posed in the nude. Many protographs of Mrs. Thaw were introduced in evidence. Mr. Jerome plied the young woman with questions as to what disposition she had made of the letters written to her by Stanford White. Some, she said, had been destroyed and some she had given to her husband. Mr. Jerome was assisted materially in his cross-examination by typewritten statements made by Mrs. Thaw's mother and by Howard Nesbit, her brother. He consulted the statements from time to time, and Mr. Delmas let this fact become known to the jury by remarking upon it.

Mr Jerome's cross-examination may require several days yet.

Mrs. Thaw Breaks Down.

New York, Feb. 23. — Under the stress of a cross-examination in which District Attorney Jerome gave no quarter, Mrs. Evelyn Nesbit Thaw broke down yesterday upon the witness stand. With blinding tears burning their way down cheeks which from ashen white had flushed to crimson, she admitted that after her first experience with Stanford White her relations with the architect continued for several months. But this was not all.

Damaging Confessions.

There were other confessions which, while damaging to her own character, accentuated all the more the terrible personal sacrifice she is making in the effort to save her husband from death in the electric chair.

After bringing out that her relations with White continued for some time, Mr. Jerome went deeper. Mrs. Thaw admitted that in 1903, after the return from Europe, she spent the night at Thaw's apartments in New York, and that for three weeks he and she occupied connecting apartments at the Grand hotel in this city.

Defendant in Bad Light.

Mrs. Thaw made what was considered her most damaging statement to the defendant when she said he had showed her copies of cablegrams that were being sent to Stanford White from Europe, asking him to use his influence with a certain man in London to prevent Mrs. Nesbit from "raising a fuss" and interfering with Evelyn continuing in the company of Thaw.

Mrs. Thaw also was forced to admit that when she and her mother went abroad with Thaw in 1903 they were still drawing upon the bounty of Stanford White.

Gay Life in Paris.

A letter written by Mrs. Thaw in 1904 and telling of her gay life in Paris with Harry Thaw and a "bunch from the Tenderloin" was read to the jury by Mr. Jerome. This brought out more testimony as to the "Dead Rat," a Parisian cafe

Court adjourned until Monday.

Has Decidedly Easy Day.

New York, Feb. 27.—Except for one brief moment Mrs. Evelyn Nesbit Thaw had a decidedly easy day of it yesterday during the continuation of her cross-examination by District Attorney Jerome. When adjournment was taken the prosecution announced that he had practically concluded with the witness. Mrs. Thaw will be temporarily excused to-day to enable Mr. Jerome to introduce Abraham Hummel to identify a photographic copy of the affidavit Evelyn Nesbit is alleged to have signed and which charges Thaw with many cruelties during their 1903 trip to Europe.

Denies Signing Affidavit.

Mrs. Thaw denies having made the charges contained in the affidvit, and denied having signed such an affidavit, although she admitted having signed some papers for Stanford White, the nature of which she did not know.

Mr. Jerome played his strongest card of the day at the morning session. He confronted the witness with Dr. Carlton Flint and asked if she had not been to see him with Jack Barrymore. Mrs. Thaw declared she had never seen the man before.

Makes Two Good Gains.

Instead of further hurting the cause of her husband Mrs. Thaw managed to make two decided gains. When court adjourned last Thursday it appeared from her own statements that she had used a letter of credit from Stanford White while touring Europe and had turned the letter over to Thaw. Yesterday she explained that Thaw took the letter of credit from her, saying the money was "poisonous" and neither she nor her mother would touch it, and that he would provide them with funds. Whatever had been spent of the money, she declared, was for her mother.

Explains Cablegrams.

The second point Mrs. Thaw made was concerning the cablegram which Thaw is said to have sent to Stanford White from London. It appeared Thursday that these cablegrams were requests to White to use his influence in keeping Mrs. Nesbit from "raising a row" and interfering with Evelyn continuing in company with Thaw. Mr. Jerome took up the subject again yesterday, but his questions elicited the information that the letters did not concern Mrs. Thaw at all, but related to a man—a secretary of the American embassy—in London, whom Mrs. Thaw said had "sneaked up to mamma's bedroom and insulted her." She said the man had also insulted her and Thaw had gone in search of him, but could not find him.

Mrs. Thaw's Ordeal Ended.

New York, Feb. 28. — Mrs. Evelyn Nesbit Thaw's long ordeal upon the witness stand at the trial of her husband for the killing of Stanford White came to an end yesterday. Mr. Jerome finished his cross-examination, which had lasted through nearly five court days, at the morning session. The redirect and re-cross-examinations yesterday afternoon were of the briefest character, and just prior to adjournment it was announced that the defendant's wife had finally been excused.

Blocked by Delmas.

The completion of Mrs. Thaw's examination followed the unsuccessful effort of the prosecution to draw from Abraham Hummel certain facts relating to the affidavit which Mrs. Thaw is said to have made in Hummel's law office.

Mr. Delmas, for the defense, blocked practically every question put to Hummel The district attorney is not allowed to controvert Mrs. Thaw's testimony in any way, but may test her credibility.

Clears Up Odds and Ends.

Mrs. Thaw yesterday was given the opportunity to clear up the odds and ends of her story. She denied again that she had ever used a penny of the letter of credit Stanford White gave to her before she went to Europe. She denied that she had even been mentioned in any way in connection with the James A. Garland divorce case. She said Stanford White paid all her brother's school expenses and identified receipts and checks signed by her mother and showing that the latter drew more than $3,000 from Stanford White's funds druing the year from May, 1902, to May, 1903.

THAW CREATES BIG SENSATION

ACCUSES JEROME OF MAKING UNPROFESSIONAL REMARKS IN COURT.

SAYS WIFE TOLD THE TRUTH

HER "REAL GOODNESS" BEYOND COMPREHENSION OF DISTRICT ATTORNEY.

New York, March 2. — Harry K. Thaw enlivened an extremely dull session of his trial in the supreme court yesterday by giving out to the newspaper men a brief statement in which he accused District Attorney Jerome of having made unprofessional remarks in court, asserted that his wife's testimony was absolute truth, and in conclusion declared that Mrs. Thaw's "natural goodness" was above the comprehension of the prosecuting officer.

Thaw's Statement.

This is Mr. Thaw's second statement since Aug. 10:

"With the chances millions to one against her, after the catastrophe in 1901, it is wonderful that Mrs. H. K. Thaw prevailed in the cross-examination against the persecution backed by blacklegs.

"Her testimony was absolute truth.

"Our evidence was of conversations. The cross-examination has proved the exact facts under oath.

"Mr. Jerome, finding his informants in certain lines falsifiers, concluded by more usual methods, which is to his credit.

"However, from some of his questions and some of his unprofessional remarks in court, it appeared clearly that the natural and real goodness of the witness is above his comprehension."

Was Much Chagrined.

Thaw began the preparation of his statement Wednesday afternoon. A reporter sitting near the defendant read over the latter's shoulder the two opening paragraphs. When the papers appeared with the extracts from his statement printed in display type Thaw was much chagrined. Yesterday in court he took the reporter to task. He said he had not intended making the statement public until the end of the trial. He further asserted that many mistakes appeared in the portion of the statement that was published and added that he would make a correction later.

Was Insane at Time.

Dr. Britton D. Evans, the alienist, was in the witness chair all of yesterday, undergoing cross-examination at the hands of District Attorney Jerome.

Dr. Evans and Mr. Jerome spent the entire day in going over eight letters written by Thaw and culling out of them excerpts on which Dr. Evans based his expressed belief that they were written by a person of unsound mind.

"Do you mean an insane person?" asked Mr. Jerome.

"Yes," replied the witness, "but not in the sense that the person might always remain insane."

This was the essence of the day's work.

MINNEAPOLIS AUTO SHOW

GREATEST DISPLAY OF AUTOMOBILES AND ACCESSORIES EVER SEEN WEST OF CHICAGO.

The first great automobile show to be held in the Northwest will open in Minneapolis Saturday, March 2, and continue through the following week. The show will be a worthy rival of the Chicago show, held early in February, to which automobiles flocked from all parts of the country; and vistors are expected from the entire Northwest, for the Minneapolis show.

The new National Guard armory will be given up entirely to the exhibition. The main drill hall has been allotted into space for automobiles, while the big twenty-foot gallery running around the hall will hold the exhibits of tires, accessories and things pertaining to automobiles.

The Minneapolis show will have the greater part of the $30,000 decorations which were prepared especially for the Chicago show, and which transformed the Coliseum in the Windy City into an automobile palace.

The big oil paintings used in the Chicago decorations, have also been brought to Minneapolis, and the armory will be more elaborately and satisfactorily decorated than were either the New York or Chicago show hall.

An extensive program has been arranged in connection with the show. An orchestra, selected from the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra, will play every afternoon and evening. Celebrated soloists of the Northwest will appear each night,

The managers of the show have prepared rest rooms, lounging rooms and a safe for the comfort of visitors. The show will be open each afternoon at 2 o'clock, and in the morning dealers will be admitted free between the hours of 10 o'clock and noon.

Three special nights have been arranged, Minneapolis night, on Tuesday, March 5; St. Paul night on Wednesday, March 6, and Automobile Clubs' night on Thursday, March 7. Gov. Johnson and Mayor Haynes have been asked to open the exposition.

The display of automobiles will exceed anything ever before attempted west of Chicago. Over 100 machines are expected on the floor of the armory, representing thirty makers.

A feature of the exhibits will be the display of high-powered runabouts, which will be shown by many makers. It is estimated that the machines, tires and accessories exhibited at the Minneapolis show will represent a value close to $1,500,000; and the managers have expended nearly $10,000 in the preparation of the show.

Many special cars will be exhibited at the show, including the Baby Reo, the smallest car in the world. In connection with the exhibition, the managers have secured the production of the famous Vanderbilt cup race pictures, the greatest moving picture series in the country. These pictures will be shown each day in the armory.

The armory is located on Kenwood Parkway, adjoining the club house of the Minneapolis Automobile club; and the parkway from Hennepin avenue to the armory door will be ablaze with electric lights.

THEIR FAVORITE MUNCH.

Waiters at the Capitol Know the Tastes of Old Timers.

The short frocked colored waiters in the house and senate resturants have good memories, for no sooner have the members returned to their wonted places in the restaurant than the susal orders are anticipated. There is the apple pie and milk for Congressman Burleigh, ham and eggs for Judge Smith, roast beef for Bob Cousins, crackers and half and half for Congressman McKinley, plain bread, butter and jam for Jim Watson and an egg sandwich for Speaker Cannon.

On the senate side there is not so much of the quick lunch spirit. They may not consume any more food, but they are more leisurely, and the stately senatorial "munch" is already being affected by ambitious members of the house, who take a daily constitutional between the two houses to see how that prospective seat looks that they will some day occupy.

Conveniently Arranged.

"You say you would not think of touching a penny that did not belong to you?" said the magnate's questioning friend.

"Certainly not," answered Mr. Dustin Stax. "You see, I've got the business of the country so systematized that every penny I touch legally belongs to me."

"For the last 20 years," writes a Maine man, "I've been troubled with Dyspepsia and liver complaint, and have tried about every known remedy without much in the way of results until I took up the food question.

"A friend recommended Grape-Nuts food, after I had taken all sorts of medicines with only occasional, temporary relief.

"This was about nine months ago, and I began the Grape-Nuts for breakfast with cream and a little sugar Since then I have had the food for at least one meal a day, usually for breakfast.

"Words fail to express the benefit I received from the use of Grape-Nuts. My stomach is almost entirely free from pain and my liver complaint is about cured, I have gained flesh, sleep well can eat nearly any kind of food except greasy, starchy things and am strong and healthy at the age of 70 years.

U. S. DISPENSATORY

Describes the Principal Ingredients Contained in Pe-ru-na.

Are we claiming too much for Peruna when we claim it to be an effective remedy for chronic catarrh? Have we abundant proof that Peruna is in reality such a catarrh remedy? Let us see what the United States Dispensatory says of the principal ingredients of Peruna.

Take, for instance, the ingredient hydrastis canadensis, or golden seal. The United States Dispensatory says of this herbal remedy, that it is largely employed in the treatment of depraved mucous membranes, chronic rhinitis (nasal catarrh), atonic dyspepsia (catarrh of the shomach), chronic intestinal catarrh, catarrhal jaundice, (catarrh of the liver) and in diseased mucous membranes of the pelvic organs. It is also recommended for the treatment of various forms of diseases peculiar to women.

Another ingredient of Peruna, corydalis formosa, is classed in the United States Dispensatory as a tonic. So also is cubebs classed as a stomachic and as a tonic for the mucous membranes.

Cedron seeds is another ingredient of Peruna, an excellent drug that has been very largely overlooked by the medical profession for the past fifty years. The seeds are to be found in very few drug stores. The United States Dispensatory says of the action of cedron that it is used as a bitter tonic and in the treatment of dysentery, and in intermittent diseases as a substitute for quinine.

Oil of copaiba, another ingredient of Peruna, is classed by the United States Dispensatory as a mild stimulant and diuretic. It acts on the stomach and intestinal tract. It acts as a stimulant on the genito-urinary membranes. Useful in chronic cystitis, chronic dysentery and diarrhea, and some chronic diseases of the liver and kidneys.

Send to us for a free book of testimonials of what the people think of Peruna as a catarrh remedy. The best evidence is the testimony of those who have tried it.

ODD HABITS OF PHEASANTS.

They Migrate Exactly Thirty-Five Miles Southward Each Year.

There is some curiosity as to how many English Pheasants will be raised in Kansas this year. The average number of birds raised by each pair of parents is sixty. With 2,000 in the state this would mean 7,000,000 birds in two years. The woods and fields would be overrun with them at this rate. However, there are many foes of the birds and they are killed every year in great numbers. The sleetstorms are particularly hard on them, as the water freezes on their long plumage and they are unable either to fly or run fast. When in this condition they are easy prey to dogs and wolves.

One of the queerest habits the birds have is to migrate in the late winter thirty-ve miles and always to the south. The young never stay where they were hatched, but make this move as soon as they are large enough. Naturalists have never been able to explain this. The only theory advanced is that the girds know if they stay where they were hatched the country would soon be overstocked with them. —Kansas City Journal.

COMMENT UNNECESSARY.

St. Cloud Journal Press: A few more injunctions granted by Judge Lochren and we shall be inclined to join the labor organizations in the belief that this power can be taken from the courts without harm to the government. The railroad commissioners of Minnesota, after a series of hearings, became convinced that freight rates should be reduced and made such an order. This is clearly a matter within the state, but Judge Lochren grants an injunction at the request of the railroads to stop the reduction. The council of Minneapolis passes an ordinance for "six rides for a quarter" on the street cars, and Lochren kindly grants another injunction. We refrain from comment because we are too busy to serve in jail for contempt of court.

The time to be up and doing to help the boys make the coming tournament a "howler" is here. Every encouragement and support should be given the committees in their work, as the task is a big one and will be hard work. Lighten their work with a substantial donation.

The location of the new normal school, for which Cass Lake, Thief River Falls and Bemidji have been striving, has been laid over by the legislature and will probably not be acted on at this session.

Charles W. Latta, who has made name and fame as editor of the Plummer Pioneer, has a hot fight on with the business men of his town. Charlie will make them "go some" before he gets through.

The county seat fight has had to take second place in the public eye of Red Lake Falls. The fire tournament has first place now.

Congress has adjourned and the public will now look to the supreme court to have the new laws "knocked out."

Bemidji will have another daily paper within a short time, making two dailies there.

We can all take a nice, long ride on the cars when the two-cent rate goes into effect.

The News—No Pure Drug Cough Cure Laws would be needed if all Cough Cures were like Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure is—and has been for 20 years. The National law now requires that if any poisons enter into a cough mixture, it must be printed on the label or package. For this reason mothers, and others, should insist on having Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. No poison marks on Dr. Shoop's labels—and none in the medicine else it must by law be on the label. And it's not only safe, but it is said to be by those who know it best, a truly remarkable cough remedy. Take no chance, particularly with your children. Insist on having Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. Compare carefully the Dr. Shoop package with others and see. No poison marks there. You can always be on the safe side by demanding Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. Simply refuse to accept any other. Sold by all dealers.

Always Got the Best.

"You couldn't give me a suite of two rooms with a bath room adjoining, could you? asked a young and aesthetic neophyte of a Western innkeeper.

"A what?" asked he.

"A suite of rooms."

"A which?"

"Why, a suite of rooms—a sitting room and bedchamber."

"How many is there of you?" asked the dazed landlord.

"No one is with me."

"And you want two rooms to yourself and a bath room thrown in? Well, if you ain't got the cheek, I don't know who has. Here, missus, show this chap up to that little room over the kitchen that ain't got but four beds in it. He wants to be private, he does. And he wants a bath, too; so give him a sasser of soft soap and the towel after the rest is done with it; and then show him where the pump is. This ain't exactly the Grand hotel in New York, but when a gentleman from there favors me with his company, he gets the best we've got, he does."

A Spinster.

Rev. Amos Fletcher was a keen and accomplished naturalist. His specialty was a quite remarkable knowledge of different classes of fungi. His enthusiasm, however, was but indifferently appreciated by certain members of his parish, and one day, when calling upon one of them, old Miss Locke, he was considerably embarrassed when she reminded him of the exact length of time that had elapsed since he last paid her a visit.

He began to make excuse for the delay, when she cut him short. "If I was a toadstool," she said with grim irony, "you'd have been to see me long ago!"

First Insane Asylum.

In 1796 Mr. William Tuke, a Quaker, opened the first rational asylum for the insane in York, England. A few years earlier a Frenchman named Pinel had made a similar effort to restore the mentality deficient to the rank of human beings. Pinel's plan was that of non-restraint, a system then unheard of and, of course, to be ridiculed as a preposterous heresy. It is now being followed everywhere.

Mermaids in History.

Nearly all nations have folk-lore and fairy-tale accounts of mermaids, and some times of mermen. Even the American Indians had their "woman-fish" and "man-fish." The Chinese tell stories about their sea-women of the Southern seas. Sometimes mermaids and mermen are represented as leaving the water and living with human beings, but more frequently they are pictured as being so attractive that they sometimes will lure human beings to destruction in the depths of the sea. These myths have been utilized by many poets, and have even been used for stories "with a moral."

RIDING ON A SURF BOARD.

Hawaiian Beaches Afford a Sport That Is Not Known Elsewhere.

At Waikiki, near Honolulu, is a famous bathing beach. Here winter and summer the surf canoes, or, better yet, the surf boards, come dancing in on the long rollers and men become amphibious.

There is no sensation quite comparable to riding a surfe board on a Pacific roller. It is tobogganing on a moving hillside of water, or, if you are clever enough to stand up on four board, it is taking this hillside on a single big ski. The beach runs far out before it shelves into deep water, and the breakers begin to mount almost half a mile, at high tide, from the shore line. You go out there with your surf board and wait for the wave.

You learn to catch it at the right moment, throw your board inshore, and climb upon it just as the crest of the roller mounts and catches you. Then, on this crest, you sail in toward the shore, to slide down at last when the wave breaks, down the foaming incline into shallow water and churning foam. It is royal sport.

BE A BOOSTER.

Do you know there's lots o' people,
Settin' 'round in every town,
Growlin' like a broody chicken,
Knockin' every good thing down?
Don't you be that kind o' cattle,
Cause they ain't no use on earth.
You just be a booster rooster,
Crow and boost for all you are worth.

If your town needs boostin', boost 'er,
Don't hold back an' wait to see
If some other feller's willin',
Sail right in, this country's free;
No one's got a mortgage on it,
It's yours just as much as his.
If your town is shy on boosters.
You get in the boostin' biz.

If things don't just seem to suit you,
An' the world seems kinder wrong,
What's the matter with a boostin',
Just to help the thing along;
'Cause if things should stop a goin',
We'd be in a sorry plight.
You just keep that horn a blowin',
Boost 'er up with all your might.

If you see some feller tryin'
For to make some project go,
You can boost it up a trifle,
That's your cue to let him know
That you're not a going to knock it,
Just because it ain't your "snout,"
But your're going to boost a little,
'Cause he's got "the best thing out."

If you know some feller's failin's,
Just forget 'em, 'cause you know
That same feller's got some good points,
Them's the one's you want to show;
"Cast your loaves on the waters,
They'll come back," 's a sayin' true,
Mabbe they will come back, "buttered,"
When some feller boosts for you.

SAD DEATH.

Joseph, the twelve-year-old son of Jos. Benoit died at his home in this city at 6:30 Wednesday morning of typhoid fever. The funeral took place this morning from St. Joseph's church and the remains were taken to the cemetery southwest of town for burial.

He was a bright boy and a member of the Altar Boys' Society, six of whom were pall bearers and the rest of which, 32 in number, took the remains at the entrance of the church and stood up with cossack and surplice near the coffin during the entire service. The pupils of St. Joseph's school attended in a body in honor of their late companion. The school choir rendered appropriate hymns under the leadership of Miss Eva Paradis. Relatives and friends were deeply impessed by the majesty of the ceremony organized by the sisters of St. Joseph's school.

HER FIRST BANK BOOK.

How She Escaped Drawing Checks for Odd Cents.

She was very proud of her first bank book, and determined to make none of the silly mistakes she had read about in the joke columns of newspapers. There was no danger of overdrawing her account, says the New York Sun. Every check was duly recorded on the stub, and every four checks a balance was correctly struck.

"But how is it?" asked the man one day when looking over her book; "how is it that your checks always come out in even dollars? Do you ever have a sum like $5.11 to pay?"

"Yes, often; but I have a famous scheme," she explained gleefully. "It's such a bother to add up the cents that I just make the check out for $5 and send the 11 cents in postage stamps."

An Embarrassing Gift.

Dr. W. G. Grace, the famous English cricketer, has been the recipient of many gifts from lovers of cricket as tangible proofs of their admiration of his prowess. Some of them have been remarkable in character, but perhaps the most embarrassing gift he ever received was one of three young pigs which a Worcestershire farmer sent to him in recognition of a great batting feat which he had witnessed.

WHAT ADVERTISING WILL DO

Especially Exemplified in the Case of Harry Mitchell, Minneapolis' Famous Tailor.

It would be difficult to find a better exemplification of what good and persistent advertising will do for a man with the goods back of him than the case of Harry Mitchell, Minneapolis' popular tailor.

You will notice we said "with the goods back of him" for there is probably no tailor in the Twin Cities that carries a quarter of the stock that Harry Mitchell does, and the fabrics being purchased from the foremost mills of America and Europe, the quality is absolutely assured.

Five years ago Mr. Mitchell was conducting a tailor shop on the second floor of a building in Chicago, making a specialty of the finer class of work. He had been in this business seven years.

One day he woke up to the fact that Minneapolis was a pretty good kind of a town, and as the western fever grew upon him, he decided to pull up stakes and move his belongings here.

He started out in Minneapolis in a small way—growing, growing, till today he is one of the largest tailors in the United States.

His success is due entirely to the fact that he is scrupulously honest—always giving a little more rather than a little less in all his transactions.

He conducts his business on a strictly cash basis, and no matter who the customer may be—banker or laborer—the goods must be paid for when delivered. This has been a very potent factor in the building up of his business, for there are no bad accounts standing out, no collectors fees to pay, and no "dead beats to write off on the wrong side of the ledger.

His store is located at 310 Nicollet avenue, is absolutely up-to-date in every respect, and the arrangement for exhibiting the enormous stock is commented on by every one who enters. The fitting or trying on room is furnished in a most luxurious manner, every detail being studied out for the comfort of the customer.

Mr. Mitchell's work rooms, where two hundred and forty people are employed, are located at Hennepin and Fourth street. There are no better, more commodious, more sanitary tailoring quarters in the world than those provided by Harry Mitchell for his employees. Every thing runs like clockwork, and it would be hard to find a more contented, happier bunch than work there.

Mr. Mitchell has always been an advocate of paying a man good wages, and probably no other tailor in the country employs such high-priced cutters as he does. He believes in getting the best that money can buy. He has absolutely no use for a man unless he's a past-master at his business, and that is why Harry Mitchell has no fear in putting on his shingle "Satisfaction or no Pay."

His customers include some of the best dressers in Minneapolis but it makes no difference to Mr. Mitchell whether the customer is a banker, a railroad president or a $15-a-week clerk, they all get the same painstaking attention.

That Harry Mitchell has absolutely become famous for his made-to-order $15, $20 and $25 suits and overcoats is an established fact—not only in Minnesota but in all the surrounding states. His mail order business has grown so rapidly in the past two years that it became imperative for him to enlarge his quarters. He prides himself on his perfected measurement system, and says it makes no difference where a man may live, he can fit him just as well as if he took his measure himself.

As previously said, Mr. Mitchell, is a stanch believer in publicity. He says you can't catch fish without a bait, and he doesn't see how the public is going to know what you've got to give then unless you tell them.—Minneapolis Journal.

SEAGULLS ATTACK A MAN.

Sailor Washed Overboard Has a Desperate Struggle for Life.

A Danish sailor has had a narrow escape from meeting death from a flock of seagulls. His ship, the Flandria, from Cronstadt to Copenhagen, was within fifty miles of her destination when he was washed overboard by a heavy sea. He was a powerful swimmer, and divesting himself of his clothing prepared to make a stout battle for life.

No sooner, however, had the man got clear of his garments than a great flock of seagulls gathered around and began a fierce attack upon the intruder into their quiet domain, whom they pecked at remorselessly with their beaks. For six hours the man contrived to keep himself afloat, warding off his persecutors as best he could, one or two ships passing without noticing him.

When at last a Russian steamer the Elisa, took him on board his strength was utterly exhausted.—Newcastle Chronicle.

AWFUL NEURALGIA

Pain Turned This Woman's Hair White but She Was Cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Do not seek relief from suffering simply, but free your system from the disease which is the cause of your suffering. That is the message which a former victim of neuralgia sends to those who are still in its grasp. Hot applications, powders that deaden the senses and others that reduce the heart action may cause temporary relief but the pain is sure to return with greater intensity.

Mrs. Evelyn Creusere, who has a beautiful home at 811 Boulevard West, Detroit, Mich., suffered for years with neuralgia until she tried this tonic treatment. She says:

"My trouble began about six years ago and I did not rest as I should have, but kept up about my many duties. After a time I became so weak I could not do any work at all. I had severe backaches and such dreadful headaches in the back part and top of my head. My eyes were easily tired and at times I saw black spots before them. I consulted several doctors but without the slightest benefit. The pains were so intense that my hair turned white.

"I lost continually in weight and strength and was almost in despair when a friend recommended Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I tried them according to directions and soon began to feel relief. At the end of three months I had gained ten pounds in weight and had no more trouble with my nerves. I have been in perfect health ever since and can heartily commend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or sent postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

Conscientious.

"Are you willing to swear that the defendant was under the influence of liquor at the time?" asked the lawyer who was doing the cross-examining.

"No," replied the witness. "I never swear. But I'm willing to bet you $5 to a nickel that he was."

THIS IS WORTH SAVING.

Valuable Advice and Recipe by Well Known Authority.

The following simple home-made mixture is said to relieve any form of Rheumatism or bachache, also cleanse and strengthen the Kidneys and Bladder, overcoming all urinary disorders if taken before the stage of Bright's disease: Fluid Extract Dandelion one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Mix by shaking well in a bottle and take in teaspoonful doses after meals and at bedtime.

A well-known authority states that these ingredients are mainly of vegetable extraction, and harmless to use, and can be obtained at small cost from any good prescription pharmacy. Those who think they have kidney trouble or suffer with lame back or weak bladder or Rheumatism, should give this prescription a trial, as no harm can possibly follow its use, and it is said to do wonders for some people.

THE FATAL GLOVE.

THE FATAL GLOVE.

BY CLARA AUGUSTA

CHAPTER IV.—(CONTINUED).

He judged her by the majority of women he had met, and finding her indifferent, he sought to arouse her jealousy by flirting with Miss Lee, who was by no means adverse to his attentions. But Margie hailed the transfer with relief which was so evident that Mr. Linmere, piqued and irritated, took up his hat to leave, in the midst of one of Miss Lee's most brilliant descriptions of what she had seen in Italy, from whence she had but just returned. He went over to the sofa where Margie was sitting.

"I hope to please you better next time," he said, lifting her hand. "Good-night, Margie, dear." And before she was aware, he touched his lips to her forehead. She tore the hand away from him, and a flush of anger sprang to her cheek. He surveyed her with admiration. He liked a little spirit in a woman, especially as he intended to be able to subdue it when it pleased him. Her anger made her a thousand times more beautiful. He stood looking at her a moment, then turned and withdrew.

Margie struck her forehead with her hand, as if she would wipe out the touch he had left there.

Alexandrine came and put her arm around Margie's waist.

"I almost envy you, Margie," she said, in that singularly purring voice of hers. "Ah, Linmere is magnificent! Such eyes, and hair, and such a voice! Well, Margie, you are a fortunate girl."

And Miss Lee sighed, and shook out the heavy folds of her violet silk, with the air of one who has been injured, but is determined to show a proper spirit of resignation.

CHAPTER V.

MR. PAUL LINMERE hurried along through an unfrequented street to his suite of rooms at the St. Nicholas. He was very angry with everybody; he felt like an ill-treated individual. (He had expected Margie to fall at once. A man of his attraction to be snubbed as he had been, by a mere chit of a girl, too!

"I will find means to tame her, when once she is mine," he muttered. "By heaven! but it will be rare sport to break that fiery spirit! It will make me young again."

Something white and shadowy bound his path. A spectral hand was laid on his arm, chilling like ice, even through his clothing. The ghastly face of a woman—a face framed in jet black hair and lit up by great black eyes bright as stars, glanced through the mirk of the night.

The man gazed into the weird face, and shook like a leaf in the blast. His arm sank nerveless to his side, palsied by that frozen touch, his voice was so unnatural that he started at the sound.

"My God! Arabel Vere! Do the dead come back?"

The great unnaturally brilliant eyes seemed to burn into his brain. The cold hand tightened on his arm. A breath like wind freighted with snow crossed his face.

"Speak, for heaven's sake," he cried. "Am I dreaming?"

"Remember the banks of the Seine!" said a singularly sweet voice, which sounded to Mr. Paul Linmere as if it came from leagues and leagues away. "When you sit by the side of the living love, remember the dead! Think of the dark rolling river, and of what its waters covered."

He started from the strange presence, and caught at a post for support. His self-possession was gone; he trembled like the most abject coward. Only for a moment—and then, when he looked again, the apparition had vanished.

"Good God!" he cried, putting his hand to his forehead. "Do the dead indeed come back? I saw them take her from the river—Oh, heaven! I saw her when she sank beneath the terrible waters! Is there a hereafter, and does a man sell his soul to damnation who commits what the world calls murder?"

He stopped under a lamp and drew out his pocketbook, taking therefrom a soiled scrap of paper.

"Yes, I have it here. 'Found drowned, the body of a woman. Her linen was marked with the name of Arabel Vere. Another unfortunate—' No, I will not read the rest. I have read it too often, now, for my peace of mind. Yes, she is dead. There is no doubt. I have been dreaming tonight. Old Trevlyn's wine was too strong for me. Arabel Vere, indeed! Pshaw! Paul Linmere, you are an idiot!"

Not daring to cast a look behind him he hurried home, and up to his spacious parlor on the second floor.

Linmere turned up the gas into a flare, and, throwing off his coat, flung himself into an armchair and wiped the perspiration from his forehead. He looked about the room with half frightened, searching eyes. He dreaded solitude, and he feared company, yet felt the necessity of speaking to some one. His eye lighted on the greyhound dozing on the hearth rug.

"Leo, Leo," he called, "come here, sir."

The dog opened his eyes, but gave no responsive wag of the tail. You saw at once that though Leo was Mr. Paul Linmere's property, and lived with him, he did not have any attachment for him.

"Come here, sir!" said Linmere, authoritatively.

Still the animal did not stir. Linmere was nervous enough to be excited to anger by the veriest trifle, and the dog's disobedience aroused his rage.

"Curse the brute!" he cried; and putting his foot against him, he sent him spinning across the room. Leo did not growl, or cry out, but his eyes gleamed like coals, and he showed his white teeth with savage but impotent hatred. It was easy to see that if he had been a bull dog instead of a greyhound he would have torn Mr. Paul Linmere limb from limb.

Linmere went back to his chair, and sat down with a sullen face, but he could not rest there. He rose, and going into an inner room, brought out an ebony box, which he opened, and from which he took a miniature in a golden case. He hesitated a moment before touching the spring, and when he did so the unclosing revealed the face of a young girl—a fair young girl in her early youth—not more than eighteen summers could have scattered their roses over her, when that beautiful impression was taken. A ripe southern face, with masses of jet black hair, and dark brilliant eyes. There was a dewy crimson on her lips, and her cheeks were red as damask roses. A bright, happy face, upon which no blight had fallen.

"She was beautiful—beautiful as an houri!" said Mr. Paul Linmere, speaking slowly, half unconsciously, it seemed, his thoughts aloud. "And when I first knew her she was sweet and innocent."

He sprang up and rang the bell violently. Directly his valet, Pietro, a sleepy looking and swarthy Italian, appeared.

"Bring me a glass of brandy, Pietro; and look you, sir, you may sleep tonight on the lounge in my room. I am not feeling quite well, and may have need of you before morning."

The man looked surprised, but made no comment. He brought the stimulant, his master drank it off, and then threw himself, dressed as he was, on the bed.

CHAPTER VI.

UPPER tendom was ringing with the approaching nuptials of Miss Harrison and Mr. Linmere. The bride was so beautiful and wealthy, and so insensible to her good fortune in securing the most eligible man in her set. Half the ladies in the city were in love with Mr. Linmere. He was so distingue, carried himself so loftily, and yet was so gallantly condescending and so inimitably fascinating. He knew Europe like a book, sang like a professor, and knew just how to hand a lady her fan, adjust her shawl, and take her from her carriage. Accomplishments which make men popular, always.

Early in July Mr. Trevlyn and Margie, accompanied by a gay party, went down to Cape May. Mr. Trevlyn had long ago forsworn everything of the kind; but since Margie Harrison had come to reside with him he had given up his hermit habits, and been quite like other nice gouty old gentlemen.

The party went down on Thursday—Mr. Paul Linmere following on Saturday. Margie had hoped he would not come; in his absence she could have enjoyed the sojourn, but his presence destroyed for her all the charms of sea and sky. She grew frightened, sometimes, when she thought how intensely she hated him. And in October she was to become his wife.

Some way, Margie felt strangely at ease on the subject. She knew that arrangements were all made, that her wedding trousseau was being gotten up by a fashionable modiste, that Delmonico had received orders for the feast, and that the oranges were budded, which, when burst into flowers, were to adorn her forehead on her bridal day. She despised Linmere with her whole soul, she dreaded him inexpressibly, yet she scarcely gave her approaching marriage with him a single thought. She wondered that she did not; when she thought of it at all, she was shocked to find herself so impassive.

Her party had been a week at Cape May, when Archer Trevlyn came down, with the wife of his employer, Mr. Belgrade. The lady was in delicate health and had been advised to try sea air and surf bathing. Mr. Belgrade's business would not allow of his absence at just that time, and he had shown his confidence in his head clerk by selecting him as his wife's escort.

Introduced into society by so well established an aristocrat as Mrs. Belgrade, Arch might at once have taken a prominent place among the fashionables; but his singularly handsome face and high bred manners made him an acquisition to any company. But he never forgot that he had been a street sweeper, and he would not submit to be patronized by the very people who had once, perhaps, grudged him the pennies they had thrown to him as they would have thrown bread to a starving dog. So he avoided society, and attended only on Mrs. Belgrade. But from Alexandrine Lee he could not escape. She fastened upon him at once. She had a habit of singling out gentlemen, and giving them the distinction of her attentions, and no one thought of noticing it now. Arch was ill at ease beneath the infliction, but he was a thorough gentleman and could not repulse her rudely.

A few days after the arrival of Mrs. Belgrade, Arch took her down to the beach to bathe. The beach was alive with the gorgeous grotesque figures of the bathers. The air was bracing, the surf splendid.

Mr. Trevlyn's carriage drove down soon after Mrs. Belgrade had finished her morning's "dip;" and Margie and Mr. Linmere, accompanied by Alexandrine Lee, alighted. They were in bathing costume, and Miss Lee, espying Arch, fastened upon him without ceremony.

"Oh, Mr. Trevlyn," she said animatedly, "I am glad to have come across you. I was just telling Mr. Linmere that two ladies were hardly safe with only one gentleman, in such a surf as there is this morning. I shall have to depend on you to take care of me. Shall I?"

Of course, Arch could not refuse, and apologized to Mrs. Belgrade, who good naturedly urged him forward, he taking charge of Miss Lee.

Linmere offered Margie his hand to lead her in, but she declined. He kept close beside her, and when they stood waist deep in the water, and a huge breaker was approaching, he put his arm around her shoulders. With an impatient gesture she tore herself away. He made an effort to retain her, and in the struggle Margie lost her footing, and the receding wave bore her out to sea.

Linmere grew pale as death. He knew if Margie was drowned, he was a ruined man. His pictures and statuary would have to go under the hammer—his creditors were only kept from striking by his prospect of getting a rich wife to pay his debts. He cast an imploring eye on the swimmers around him, but he was too great a coward to risk his life among the swirling breakers.

Only one man struck bravely out to the rescue. Arch Trevlyn threw off the clinging hand of Miss Lee, and with a strong arm pressed his way through the white-capped billows. He came near to Margie, and saw the chestnut gleam of her hair on the bright treacherous water, and in an instant it was swept under a long line of snowy foam. She rose again at a little distance, and her eyes met his pleadingly. Her lips syllabled the words, "save me!"

He heard them, above all the deafening roar of the waters. They nerved him on to fresh exertions. Another stroke, and he caught her arm, drew her to him, held her closely to his breast, and touched her wet hair with his lips. Then he controlled himself, and spoke coolly:

"Take my hand, Miss Harrison, and I think I can tow you safely to the shore. Do not be afraid."

"I am not afraid," she said, quietly.

How his heart leaped at the sound of her voice! How happy he was that she was not afraid—that she trusted her life to him! Of how little value he would have reckoned his own existence, if he had purchased hers by its loss!

CANADIAN STATESMEN.

How They Act While Attending Their Duties in Parliament.

It is a mistake to think that the act which led to the confederation of the various provinces in 1867 has attained no higher meaning in the life of the Canadian people than that of a constitutional union, says Donahoe's Magazine. It carries with it a meaning of far deeper import—a union of hearts whose offspring is oneness of patriotic aim and purpose. Of course it would be idle to say that the Canadian people are a unit upon all questions of vital interest to the life and growth of the dominion. The geographical interests of Canada are so varied that there must necessarily be at times some friction and clashing of provincial needs and ambitions. This is the case at Washington; this is the case, too, in so small a confederation as the cantons of Switzerland.

A stranger visiting the gallery of the Canadian house of commons is struck with the dignity and decorum which mark the proceedings and surround even the warmest and keenest of debates. Parliamentary procedure being rigidly adhered to, there is little room for uncalled for personalities in the heat of a discussion. Sometimes, however, when the house has been sitting for hours, wearied with the perplexities and incoherencies of some member from "way back," suddenly, as if through the unity of desperation, the usual dignity of the house is relaxed and grave members from such intellectual centers as Montreal and Toronto play the schoolboy and outvie one another in "shying" blue books at the heads of slumbering and inoffensive members. Of the 215 members that make up the house of commons, in point of ability and gifts, 20 per cent of them are below mediocrity; 20 per cent of them occupy the plane of mediocrity; 40 per cent possess admitted ability, and the remaining 20 per cent are men of commanding talent.

Whisky for All.

"For the life of me, colonel, I don't see why you persist in maintaining that whisky is of any value in the cure of snake bites. Why, all the modern scientists—"

"Young man," answered Colonel Bluegrass, turning purple, "it stands to reason, sah, that good whisky, being beneficial in every other complaint, must be of benefit in snake bites. When there is a universal law in nature, sah, it does not vary for a mere snake, sah."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

BOY USED THE MATCHES.

Result was Friction Developed in Two Places.

"I have just had a demonstration of how a man may run into danger by seeking to avoid it," said a resident of Washington recently. "A short time ago I determined to do away with the common parlor match in my home, as it is more likely than others to set the house on fire by being stepped on or by being used by children. I gathered up all the old matches and supplied holders for the safeties and put them about where the match safes had been. I felt that I had reduced the danger of fire at least 50 per cent from that particular source.

"Unfortunately this procedure was observed by a three-year-old. The safety matches may have appeared to him as a new form of toy, as they were put in just about the time Santa Claus made his visit down the chimney. At any rate, on the day after Christmas he scampered down from the third floor in a great state of excitement. No clear idea of the cause of his alarm could be had until later it was discovered that the curtain and window shade of the bath room on the third floor had been completely burned and the woodwork scorched, but fortunately after that damage was done the fire went out of its own accord.

"The practical lesson I drew from the incident was that the sparing of the rod spoils the child, and the three-year-old was given another demonstration of the danger of burning matches by having the seat of his little trousers burned with the sole of his mother's slipper in an old-fashioned way."

UNBIDDEN GUESTS AT FEAST.

Unworthy Ones Took Advantage of Gay Capital Revel.

A bit of gossip that Washington society is rolling over its tongue, is the masquerade ball at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas F. Walsh on New Year's eve. Cards were issued each guest, with his or her invitation, so that no one but those expected would make their way into the beautiful mansion under cover of a mask, but the very thing feared was the thing that happened. A gay gallant, dressed as Mephistopheles, in black velvet and gold, made his appearance early, and was most fascinating and debonnaire, paying much attention to the ladies. Of all the gallant and courteous gentlemen present none could pay a compliment or whisper a sentiment nothing so fetchingly as he. In fact, his very gallantry brought about his undoing. As the champagne flowed freely, he imbibed freely, and his attentions to a certain young lady, said to have been no other than the president's daughter, Mrs. Longworth, led to her husband's remonstrating with the host, Mr. Walsh. The gay Mephistopheles was requested to make his adieus, but as he demurred, the footman was called to assist him. When lo! the mask fell from his face, and behold a face no one there had ever seen before. It is whispered that he was not the only unbidden guest. Others were there whose conduct was so peculiar that some of the more conservative guests left early, but most stayed until the wee hours of the morning, even tiring out their hostess, who became so weary she quietly withdrew and went to bed, leaving the mad, gay crowd to frolic as late as they chose.

Epicure's Lament.

"Confound these New York and Boston fellows, they are bottling up things for us good livers in Washington," exclaimed an epicure of the national capital. "Time was, and not so long ago, that we could get as good oysters as any one in the country and get them at a reasonable rate. In the winter, oysters furnished a staple article of food for thousands of families several times a week. You remember the colored men who used to go around with a two-gallon can crying 'Oyshturs,' and the little shanties scattered through the town where they retailed them.

"Now New York and Boston are bidding for oysters and sending prices up. You can see them every day at the wharves when the pungies come in from the lower river, bidding for whole cargoes, which are barreled and shipped north to appear later as Blue Points, Buzzard Bays and other fancy brands. The young, small oysters are palmed off as Blue Points, and a little dash of brine will turn a lower Potomac oyster into a Cape Cod.

"The result of competition is to run up prices. I wish they would let us alone."

Senator Hale Objected.

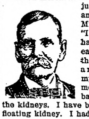
Senator Eugene Hale, of Maine, is a stickler for tradition and custom in the senate and objects to anything new creeping in. He has succeeded to the place occupied by the late Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, as the lecturer of those who start innovations. Senator McCumber had given notice that on a certain day he would call up a bill. Instantly Hale was on his feet.

"I should like to ask right here," Senator Hale said, "why, because a senator gives notice, he can bring up a bill. There is nothing in the history of the senate, there is nothing in the precedents, to sustain. The clerks have fallen into a fashion, if a senator gives notice of his intention of making a speech on a certain day, either to get all his friends here or keep them away—I know not which—of journalizing it. It should not be.

"Let the senator say he will try to get up his bill and I will help him," Senator Hale said, as he sat down, pleased with a duty done

HARDSHIPS OF ARMY LIFE.

Left Thousands of Veterans with Kidney Troubles.



The experience of David W. Martin, a retired merchant of Bolivar, Mo., is just like thousands of others. Mr. Martin says: "I think I have had kidney disease ever since the war. During an engagement my horse fell on me, straining my back and injuring the kidneys. I have been told I had a floating kidney. I had intense pain in the back, headaches and dizzy spells and the action of the bladder was very irregular. About three years ago I tried Doan's Kidney Pills, and found such great relief that I continued, and inside a comparatively short time was entirely rid of kidney trouble."

Deafness Cannot Be Cured
by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.
We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Pure White Lead is the Natural Paint Pigment

Numerous compounds are being offered to take the place of white lead as a paint, but no real substitute for it has yet been found. Pure White Lead has a peculiar property of amalgamating with the wood upon which it is used—added to this it has an elasticity which permits the paint to follow the natural expansion and contraction of the wood. Pure White Lead (with its full natural tenacity and elasticity, unimpaired by adulterants), alone fulfills all the requirements of the ideal paint. Every keg which bears the Dutch Boy trade mark is positively guaranteed to be absolutely Pure White Lead made by the Old Dutch Process.

All lead packed in 1907 bears this mark.

THE REBELLION OF JASON

By J. L. HARBOUR

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

"Now, you keep your eyes on things, pa. You'd better not go off the place all day. You might weed out my flower garden this afternoon, and you might give the cellar a cleaning-up. It needs it the worst way."

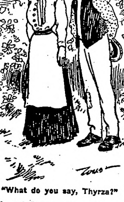
"Yes, and the barn ought to be put to rights. You might as well do it as to sit around doing nothing all day. A little work and exercise are good even for old folks. I wish that you would fix that broken panel of fence at the back part of the garden. I guess you'll find pottering around kind of work enough to last you all day."

There was gathering gloom on the face of the little old man standing at the barn yard gate as he listened to these words from his son and daughter-in-law. They and their three rosy and happy children were about to drive away to attend the "big day" at the county fair over in Hadley, six miles distant, and the old man was to be left at home to "look after the place."

This duty had fallen to the old man's portion every time his son Hugh and his family had gone anywhere for the past six months. He had acquiesced meekly enough, but there was always a spirit of rebellion in his heart.

"I am always left at home to look after the place," said the old man, bitterly. "A little work is good for old folks, is it, hey? Then I'd ort to be amazin' healthy, for I work all o' the time. I wonder if a little pleasure wouldn't be good for old folks now an' then? Hugh an' his wife never seem to think o' that. I b'lieve that Hugh an' Lyddy reely plume themselves on bein' mighty gen'rous because they 'give me a home.' As if I didn't more than pay my way! Made a hand in the hay field all summer. Nobody gives me a home! I earn one, by Joe!"

He held his head erect and squared his sloping shoulders. There was a sudden concentration of all his will-power, and his voice sounded harsh and strained as he said aloud: "I sha'n't do a mite o' work this day—blamed if I do! I don't care what Hugh and Lyddy say when they come home! I'll give 'em as good as they send if they say much to me! If I had fit things to wear I'd dress up an' go to the fair, but as it is, I'll just lazy 'round the place all day, an' have that much of a good time."



"What do you say, Thyrza?"

He thrust his hand into his pocket and drew forth an old leather wallet, which he opened. There was nothing in it but a two-dollar bill and some old newspaper clippings. The old man looked at the money and said a little bitterly: "That's all I have left o' my last quarter's pension money. The rest o' it went for the new things Hugh's children are wearin', an' that they didn't hav the grace to thank me for, an' some o' the money went for Lyddy's new bunnit she's so set over, an' the rest helped to pay for the new harness the horse has on. There wa'n't a dollar to spare for some new harness for myself. That's the way it goes. Just as soon as I get my pension money a lot o' new things are needed, an' Hugh an' Lyddy think I don't need any money, as I am so well provided for here. Provided for! Humph!"

A feeble smile of comfort came into the tear-stained old face as he said: "But I've got ahead of 'em in one way. I've got $350 in the bank that they don't know a thing about, an' that they ain't goin' to know a thing about. I had that much saved up an' in the bank when I sold my place, an' I'm thankful I had sense enough to keep my mouth shet about it. An' yet I don't dare draw an' spend a cent o' it, or they'd be fierce to know where I got the money. But who cares what Hugh and Lyddy say? I don't! Drat 'em! I'm goin' to fetch out some papers an' my pipe, an 'one o' Myra's pies that she told me not to touch, an' a piller, an' just lay 'round on the grass an' enjoy myself all day. I been under the lion's paw long enough."

Two hours later the old man was in the full enjoyment of his bold defiance of Hugh and Lyddy. He was sitting in the shade, with his back to the apple tree, his pipe in his mouth, and in full enjoyment of a book he had long wanted to find time to read, when he heard the gate creak on its hinges.

Looking up he saw a small, alert looking woman of perhaps sixty-odd years of age entering the gate. She wore a clean but faded calico dress, and she had a stiffly starched blue-and-white gingham sunbonnet on her head. The sunbonnet was lined with pink, that gave a rosy glow to the face within. Jason Bartlett sprang to his feet when he saw her.

"Why, Thyrza Ladd!" he said. "Is this you? I reckoned I was the only person in this neighborhood who hadn't gone to the fair."

"Well, you see you are not, Jason. I didn't go because—well, to tell the out-and-out truth, Jason, I just didn't have anything suitable to wear. I'd like to have gone to the fair if it had been so that I could. But I'll tell you what I came over for. My cow is mired in that soggy place in my meadow, and she can't get out. So I thought I'd come over and ask if you would come and help my poor old bossy out of her trouble."

"Why, o' course I will, Thyrza."

"I knew that you would, Jason. I couldn't help knowing that, seeing that I have known you all my life. You see, I should be dreadfully bad off if I should lose my cow. I depend largely on her and my hens for my income. You know my husband was sick so long before he died that it took all we had saved to give him what he needed. But I'm only grateful that we had it to spend for his comfort, and that I at least have my little home free from debt. I have thought some of selling it and going to live with my married daughter over in Hebron. She wants me to, and—"

"Don't you do it, Thyrza Ladd!" exclaimed the old man, vehemently, almost fiercely. "You stick to your own little home. I tell you, Thyrza, there's nothing like a home o' their own for old folks."

Jason seemed to have lapsed into a thoughtful mood. They were about to emerge from the strip of timber into the open highway, when Jason stopped abruptly, took off his shabby old hat, and held it as he said: "See here, Thyrza, we've known each other all our lives, now, haven't we? You never knowed no great harm o' me, now, did you?"

"Why, no, Jason; I've always thought that—"

"What have you thought?"

"Oh, no matter." She blushed, and started on, but Jason detained her.

"Wait a minute, Thyrza," he said. "I used to think that if I hadn't gone over Ware way to live a couple o' years, an' met the girl I married there, that I would o' asked you to marry me. It wa'n't no disrespect to my wife to think it. I had a good, true wife, an' you had a good, true husband. They are both gone now, an' we are left a lonely man an' woman. For I am lonely, an' so are you. I haven't no real home with my son. An' I want a home o' my own again. I ain't but 68, an' you are a year younger. Thyrza, don't you think that you an' me could be real happy together? Don't you, now, Thyrza? You don't know how lonesome an' unhappy I am, an' I—I Thyrza, I feel toward you to-day just as I felt that day when I asked you to go to the big meetin' over in Hillsborough with me. Your cheeks are just as rosy now as they were then, an' I— Thyrza, you're lonely, an' so am I. S'posin' we be comp'ny for each other the rest o' our days. What do you say, Thyrza?"

Three hours later Jason and Thyrza appeared at the home of the old minister in the little village of Zoar, and when they went away it was as "bride and bridegroom, pilgrims of life together."

The newly wedded pair were standing at the gate of Thyrza's home when Hugh and his family came driving by on their homeward way. There was a severe look on Hugh's face and a sharp note in his voice when he said: "What does this mean, father? Why aren't you home milking the cows?"

The old man stood erect, with his arms akimbo and a strange gleam in his eye. He threw back his head, and there was a note of defiance in his voice as he made reply: "Just because I'm done milkin' your cows, Hugh. I don't calc'late on milkin' but one cow hereafter, an' that one will be Thyrza's cow, or our cow, if Thyrza won't think it too persoomin' in me."

"What do you mean?" said Lyddy, sharply.

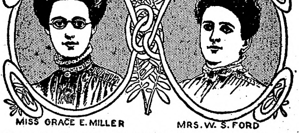
"I mean, Lyddy, that Thyrza an' me have kind o' stolen a march on you, an' went an' got married, as we'd a perfect right to, both bein' o' lawful age an' sound mind. Any objections?"

He put his arm around Thyrza's waist and kissed her boldly before adding: "Now, there ain't a thing to be said by either o' you. You'd best drive on, for it's gettin' late, an' you'll have all your chores to do by yourselves when you git home."

He waved his hand as he spoke, and Hugh and Lyddy, too dazed for further words, drove on. There was a slightly malicious smile on Jason's face as he called out after the retreating wagon: "I never pulled a blamed weed out o' that flower-bed, Lyddy, an' the cellar is just as you left it!"

They walked hand in hand up the path toward the house, between long rows of the flowers Thyrza loved so well. Jason stooped and broke off a belated pink rose, and thrust it into Thyrza's shining gray hair, saying: "It just matches your cheeks—honey."

AILING WOMEN
How Many Perfectly Well Women Do You Know?



MISS GRACE E. MILLER
MRS. W. S. FORD

"I am not feeling very well," "I am so nervous it seems as though I should fly." "My back aches as though it would break."

How often do you hear these significant expressions from women friends. More than likely you speak the same words yourself, and there is a cause.

More than thirty years ago Lydia E Pinkham of Lynn, Mass. discovered the source of nearly all the suffering endured by her sex. "Woman's Ills," these two words are full of more misery to women than any other two words that can be found in the English language. Sudden fainting, depression of spirits, reluctance to go anywhere, backaches, headaches, nervousness, sleeplessness, bearing-down sensations, displacements and irregularities are the bane of woman's existence.

The same woman who discovered the cause of all this misery also discovered a remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made from native roots and herbs holds the record for a greater number of absolute cures of female ills than any other one remedy the world has ever known and it is the greatest blessing which ever came into the lives of suffering women.

Don't try to endure, but cure the cause of all your suffering. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once removes such troubles. The following letters prove this:

Mrs. W. S. Ford of 1938 Lansdowne St., Baltimore, Md. writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—
"For four years my life was a misery to me. I suffered from irregularities, suppression, terrible dragging sensations and extreme nervousness. I had given up all hope of ever being well again when Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended. It cured my weakness and made me well and strong."

Miss Grace E. Miller, of 1218 Michigan St., Buffalo, N. Y. writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—
"I was in a very bad condition of health generally; irritable, cross, backache and suffered from a feminine weakness. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, cured me after all other medicines had failed."

What Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for Mrs. Ford and Miss Miller it will do for other women in like condition. Every suffering woman in the United States is asked to accept the following invitation. It is free, will bring you health and may save your life.

Mrs. Pinkham's Invitation to Women.

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. From the symptoms given, the trouble may be located and the quickest and surest way of recovery advised. Out of her vast volume of experience in treating female ills Mrs. Pinkham probably has the very knowledge that will help your case. Her advice is free and always helpful.

MASURY'S HOUSE PAINTS
THE STANDARD FOR OVER 50 YEARS
NEVER FAIL TO GIVE SATISFACTION

THERE is a reason why Masury's Paints meet with universal approval. During a period of sixty-five years they have proved to live the longest. Of course, there are no house paints that will not fade in time. The sun, the cold, the rain, and the wind bring their assaults to bear, and even Masury's will finally yield, but where other paints succumb in a year or two, Masury's House Paints will continue their resistance and brilliancy of finish years after cheaper paints have been forgotten. Therefore, THE PAINTS THAT WILL ENDURE THE LONGEST ARE THE BEST AND MOST ECONOMICAL.

MASURY'S HOUSE PAINTS are made from pigments carefully selected with a view to their durability. These pigments are ground in PURE LINSEED OIL, because this vehicle, on account of its elastic, preservative and drying qualities, has been proven, by sixty-five years of experience, to be superior to all others. LINSEED OIL PROTECTS THE SURFACES AND INSURES THE RETENTION OF THE COLOR for the longest possible period. Insist upon a PURE LINSEED OIL PAINT. Your best guarantee is that every package bears the name of

Catarrh is not merely an inflammation of the tissues of the head and throat, as the symptoms of ringing noises in the ears, mucous dropping back into the throat, continual hawking and spitting, etc., would seem to indicate; it is a blood disease in which the entire circulation and the greater part of the system are involved. Catarrh is due to the presence of an excess of uric acid in the blood. The Liver, Kidneys and Bowels frequently become torpid and dull in their action and instead of carrying off the refuse and waste of the body, leave it to sour and form uric acid in the system. This is taken up by the blood and through its circulation distributed to all parts of the system. These impurities in the blood irritate and inflame the different membranes and tissues of the body, and the contracting of a cold will start the secretions and other disgusting and disagreeable symptoms of Catarrh. As the blood goes to all parts of the body the catarrhal poison affects all parts of the system. The head has a tight, full feeling, nose continually stopped up, pains above the eyes, slight fever comes and goes, the stomach is upset and the entire system disordered and affected by this disease. It is a waste of time to try to cure Catarrh with sprays, washes, inhalations, etc. Such treatment does not reach the blood, and can, therefore, do nothing more than temporarily relieve the discomfort of the trouble. To cure Catarrh permanently the blood must be thoroughly purified and the system cleansed of all poisons, and at the same time strengthened and built up. Nothing equals S. S. S. for this purpose. It attacks the disease at its head, goes down to the very bottom of the trouble and makes a complete and lasting cure. S. S. S. removes every particle of the catarrhal poison from the blood, making this vital stream pure, fresh and healthy. Then the inflamed membranes begin to heal, the head is loosened and cleared, the hawking and spitting cease, every symptom disappears, the constitution is built up and vigorous health restored. S. S. S. also tones up the stomach and digestion and acts as a fine tonic to the entire system. If you are suffering with Catarrh begin the use of S. S. S. and write us a statement of your case and our physicians will send you literature about Catarrh, and give you special medical advice without charge. S. S. S. is for sale at all first class drug stores.

I had Catarrh for about fifteen years, and no man could have been worse. I tried everything I could hear of, but no good resulted. I then began S. S. S., and could see a little improvement from the first bottle, and after taking it a short while was cured. This was six years ago, and I am as well today as any man. I think Catarrh is a blood disease, and know there is nothing on earth better for the blood than S. S. S. Nobody thinks more of S. S. S. than I do. M. MATSON, Lapeer, Mich.

That all men are born free and equal but it's a waste of time trying to prove it to the satisfaction of a woman.

That when a man franklyi admits that he was in the wrong it is the equivalent to his saying, "I am wiser today than I was yesterday."

That if a man takes a thing that doesn't belong to him he is called a thief but if a woman does the same thing she is called a "kleptomaniac."

That if a man has a good deal to say about being "the head of his house," it is likely he is trying to conceal the fact that he is henpecked.

"TORPEDO BOATS BY POST."

Effective Little War Vessels Propelled Without the Aid of Steam.

A torpedo boat that can be sent on by rail to the port where it is most required opens up possibilities which naval experts have never contemplated. Yesterday morning the king witnessed a trial of the new motor Yarrow torepdo boat, one of the most extraordinary vessels that have ever been placed on the navy list.

The idea of a boat drawing little water and capable of being navigable in shallow waters originated with the admiralty, who approved of the scheme to make these vessels propelled by internal combustion in preference to steam. The result of the experiment was seen recently from the deck of the Victoria and Albert.

The new vessel carries two torpedoes, weighs eight tons and measures sixty feet in length and nine feet in breadth. Her horse power is 300 and the advantage the petroleum craft has over steam may be gauged from the fact that her range of effectiveness, i. e., the distance she can go without recharging, is 600 miles, as against a steam vessel's 100.

Apart from the enormous value as a method of river defense there is a novel interest in the possibility of "torpedo boas by post."

An Ill Wind.

T. P. O'Connor, the Irish leader, began a brilliant after-dinner speech in Philadelphia in this way:

"I must confess that I dread to make after dinner speeches. At the most sumptuous dinners, even at such a dinner as this one, if I know that at the end I must make a speech, I am nervous, I have no appetite. I find little to admire in the best efforts of the chef.

"In truth, gentlemen, I can readily imagine Daniel, if he was at all of my mind, heaving a sigh of relief as the lions drew near to devour him—heaving a sigh of relief and murmuring:

"'Well, if there's any after-dinner speaking to be done on this occasion at least it won't be done by me.'"

Cold Tubs for Dogs.

Cold tubs for dogs is the latest hygienic rule in Germany. It has been discovered that dogs contract certain affections of the skin and communicate them to human beings. From this fact the necessity for cleanliness and frequent washing is deduced. Special bathing establishments for dogs, with specially costructed baths to obviate tubs or other receptacles into which dogs object to go or to be lifted are being built in many towns and are widely patronized. The last has just been opened in Dresden.

She Would Not Plead.

A woman indicted in London the other day for attempting to commit suicide refused to plead. The jury thereupon was asked to find whether her refusal to plead was "due to malice or to the visitation of God." The jury found that she refused to plead out of malice and convicted her, and she was sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment.

SUICIDE OR ACCIDENT?

Peculiar Circumstances Surrounding the Death of Lars Brenden Last Monday.

The circumstances surrounding the death of Lars Brenden, of Kratka, are somewhat mysterious. He was on his way to Thief River Falls from his home last Monday. Some of his neighbors, who had been in conversation with him on the way, and had driven a short distance ahead, heard the report of a shotgun and hurried back to find Mr. Brenden dead. The top of his head was blown away.

Mr. Brenden was 45 years old and leaves a widow and three small children. He had considerable personal property.

Ill health is supposed to be the cause of the suicide (which seems to be the general opinion) as he was on his way to visit a doctor at the time.

FREE TIMBER FROM RESERVES

Administration Aids the Development of Country and Improves Forest.

The Government during the past year has furnished $75,000 worth of timber to settless and ranchers in or near the reserves without charge. One of the regulations of the Forest Service provides that legitimate applicants may secure what timber they need by what is conveniently called "free use" privilege. Fifteen thousand permitees in this way obtained timber to supply their wants.

From these figure it may readily be seen that the settlers are securing very material assistance without cost from the forest reserves. At the same time, the free use business has been so handled that the material taken out has improved the condition of the forest. Dead timber which would otherwise have rotted or helped to spread forest fires has been removed first of all. Where it was necessary for the settlers to have green wood the rangers, so far as possible, marked trees which were suppessed, diseased or from some other cause no longer in a condition for further growth. In this way the ranchers secured material which they desired, and at the same time the forest was left stocked with the thriftiest trees, whose chance to develop will be unhindered.

The greatest amount of free use was on those reserves which lie in the semi-arid parts of the West, where there is least timber. On a number of reserves the value of the material for which permits were issued exceeded $3,000, and on the Wenaha Reserve in Washington and Oregon, Bear River Reserve in Utah and Idaho, and the Weiser and Henrys Lake reserves in Idaho it exceeded $4,000. If there had been no restriction on the settlers in securing this material, great waste would have resulted, because the settlers would have paid no attention to the future good of the forest or its value as a protective covering. Another distinct advantage of the system is that a settler, when he has secured his permit, is sure of being able to get the material from the locality assigned to him without interferance from other people.

Very little change in the handling of the free-use business is contemplated for next year. The experience of the past year has shown, however, that methods can be systemized so as to give yet better service to the people and be more economical to the Forest Service.

This branch of the work of the Forest Service gives good evidence of the fact that the aim in the administration of the forest reserves is to aid in the permanent devopment of the country and place only such restrictions on the cutting of timber as are necessary for the maintenance of a permanent timber supply and the conservation of water needed for irrigation, for cities, and for the generation of power.

The free-use privilege has been granted freely to ranchers who are building up homes, and enough timber will be reserved to supply their wants even if this will considerably reduce the amount of timber that can be sold.

Southern Part of State Gets State Institutions--Time the Legistators Worked for the North.

It is about time that the members of the state legislature from the northern part of the state combined issues and interests and by united effort secured for this section what it is entitled to says the Crookston Times. It becomes monotonous to read in the daily papers of bill after bill introduced placing some state institution in some city in the southern half of the state, or placing at their disposal appropriations for betterments aggregating hundreds of thousands of dollars. Up to the present time the south has monopolized state institutions and appropriations and it is high time that the north aroused itself and by united and determined action place itself on the map. The north half of the state is entitled to its share of the state institutions and from now on, its representatives should see to it that any institution proposed should be located in their district, until such a time as we shall have our just proportion.

During the past week a bill was introduced in the house asking for an appropriation of $500,000 for the erection of another prison at Stillwater. It is possible and highly probable that the state needs additional prison facilities, but is there any special reason why another prison should be located at Stillwater? The present prison accomodations are probably large enough to meet the requirements of the southern portion of the state and why would it not be wise to have a state prison in the northern portion? It costs the different counties in the northern and western portion of the state money to transport their state prison offenders to Stillwater and each county would save considrable funds in the course of a year, if the penitentiary was more accessible.

It is the established policy of the states of Illinois and Iowa and many others to erect penitentiaries in different sections of the state, and it has proven both practical and economical. Such a policy in this state, taking into consideration its immense distances, would undoubtedly be a success, and it is time the representatives of the northern portion of the state got together and issued an ultimatum to the effect that if another prison is to be erected, it must be built in this portion of the state.

This would not be an unfair proposition when you take into consideration that one quarter of the taxable property and one-quarter of the population in the section comprising the following legislative districts: 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 59, 60, 61, 62, and 63. Then think for a minute of the state institutions located there. An asylum at Fergus Falls, a normal school at Duluth and another at Moorhead, and a proposed new sanitarium for tuberculous at Leech Lake.

Now look at the imposing list of state institutions located in the other section of the state! The university at Minneapolis, the state penitentiary at Stillwater, the State Public school at Owatonna, the State Training School at Red Wing, the State Reform School at St. Cloud, the School for Deaf, the school for the Blind, the School for the Deaf, the School for the Feeble Minded at Faribault, state hospitals and asylums at St. Peter. Roochester, Anoka, and Hastings, normal schools at St. Cloud, Winona and Mankato, the Minnesota Soldier's home at Minneapolis, the fish hatcheries at St. Paul and Glenwood, the state fair at St. Paul and the $3,000,000 state capitol at St. Paul. These institutions aggregate in value many millions of dollars and at each legislative session hundreds of thousands of dollars are set aside for their maintenance and betterment.

We have no objection to the money spent on them and contend that they should be maintained in a manner befitting the dignity and imporance of the state, but we most strenuously object the further erection of public institutions in that section of the state until the rights of the northern portion are accorded. So far we have been extremely modest in our requests and have patiently accepted what the southern part of the state has seen fit to throw us. We are developing into a great empire, however, and we must insist that our needs are looked after on the same basis as any other portion of the state, and we demand of our representatives in the state legislature that they unite and insist that this northern half of the state get a fair proportion of all state improvements and betterments.

They will have a chance to show their metal on the new penitentiary bill and it is up to them to make good. If a new penitentiary is erected, the northern portion of the state should be its location, and every business man in this section should see to it that the men in the legislature are fully acquainted with the sentiment existing.

Heart Strength

Heart Strength, or Heart Weakness, means Nerve Strength, or Nerve Weakness—nothing more. Positively, not one weak heart in a hundred is, in itself, actually diseased. It is almost always a hidden tiny little nerve that really is all at fault. This obscure nerve—the Cardiac, or Heart Nerve—simply needs, and must have, more power, more stability, more controlling, more governing strength. Without that the Heart must continue to fail, and the stomach and kidneys also have these same controlling nerves.

This clearly explains why, as a medicine, Dr. Shoop's Restorative has in the past done so much for weak and ailing Hearts. Dr. Shoop first sought the cause of all this painful, palpitating, suffocating heart distress. Dr. Shoop's Restorative—this popular prescription—is alone directed to these weak and wasting nerve centers. It builds; it strengthens; it offers real, genuine heart help.

If you would have strong Hearts, strong digestion, strengthen these nerves—re-establish them as needed, with

WITH THE LAWMAKERS

Work Accomplished by the State Legislators.

St. Paul, Feb. 28.—Woman suffrage received its death blow in the house yesterday. The bill providing for a constitutional amendment was indefinitely postponed by a vote of 65 to 35. This action followed a long discussion in the committee of the whole.

Majority and minority reports on the bill to increase the salaries of judges and justices of the supreme court were presented, and after a lively skirmish both reports were accepted and the bill placed on general orders. A hard fight against the bill seems certain.

Bills introduced: Providing for the annexation of territory by the city of Stillwater; to regulate the sale of plants, trees, shrubbery, and to provide against the spread of infectious diseases among plants and trees, and inspection of nursery stock owned or sold by companies or corporations doing a nursery business in the state; to prohibit the use and sale of automatic shotguns; to legalize the foreclosure of mortgages by advertisement where the power of attorney to foreclose the same has not been executed or recorded; authorizing cities owning an electric light plant to issue bonds; to place the state public school and the school for the deaf and blind under the control of the state board of control; fixing the rate of taxation on inheritances; imposing a tax of 10 cents a ton, for state purposes only, upon all tonnage ore mined or produced from any lands within the state.

In the Senate.

There were a dozen petitions presented in the senate in favor of county option, and two remonstrances against county option.

Senator Calhoun introduced a new pure food bill. He explained that it is a copy of the national pure food law, now the law of each state except three, and adds to that law the provisions already embodied in the state law.

The bill providing for the taxation of inheritances was reported for indefinite postponement.

Other bills introduced were: To accept donations for hospital buildings and equipment for the University of Minnesota and providing for maintaining free clinical hospital facilities; to empower cities of the fourth class to issue bonds in the construction of steam and electric roads; to appropriate $10,000 to commemorate the service of the First Minnesota volunteers and their late colonel, William Colvill.

Two bills were passed: Giving free education at the university to veterans of the Spanish war; allowing district judges to exchange duty under certain circumstances.

St. Paul, March 1.—The house yesterday passed the resolution calling for an investigation of the finances of the state university by a vote of 92 to 14. The university regents are said to court the investigation.

A resolution was offered calling for an investigation of the stories of alleged cruelties at the St. Peter and other insane hospitals. The resolution went over under notice of debate.

The Standard Oil is the next octopus to be investigated by the house. A resolution calling for a thorough investigation was introduced by Representative Brady. It is to be along lines calculated to bring out the information whether or not the Standard is in control of the oil sold and distributed in Minnesota.

A raise in salary for the legislators in the shape of $1,000 for the two legislative years made its appearance in the form of a bill introduced by Representative Wells. The speaker is to have $10 a day in addition to this figure.

Representative Timberlake introduced a bill giving the university regents the right of condemnation of land and the erection of the necessary buildings for the enlargement of the university. It is a wide-open expansion bill, and for the carrying out of the same a three-tenth mill tax for a period of five years, to be levied over the state, is authorized.

A standard for canned fruits and vegetables is provided for in a bill introduced by Representative Dorsey. Canners who comply with the pure requirements can label their products "Minnesota Standard," a term which will be copyrighted for the state.

In the Senate.

The senate yesterday killed the bill requiring that dogs should be restrained by their owners in order to prevent the spread of rabies.

A bill to prevent unfair competition was introduced by Senator Hinton. It provides that any person, firm, company, association or corporation, foreign or domestic, doing business in Minnesota and engaged in the production, manufacture and distribution of any commodity in general use, that shall intentionally or otherwise, for the purpose of destroying the business of a competitor in any locality, discriminate between different sections by selling such a commodity at a lower rate in one section than another, shall be deemed guilty of unfair discrimination. When found guilty they must pay the costs, and their permit to sell shall be revoked by the secretary of state.

Other bills introduced: Relating to the furnishing of liquor to certain persons; delinquency of children under seventeen years of age, giving jurisdiction to the juvenile courts; to appropriate $50,000 for the deepening, straightening and improving of Buffalo creek, its tributaries and branches, in the counties of Renville and McLeod.

Bills passed: Appropriating money for the purchase of seed grain for farmers whose crops were destroyed in whole or part by excess rainfall in 1905 and 1906; relating to the Minnesota sanitarium for consumptives; prohibiting the manufacture and sale of blank cartridges, big firecrackers and other explosives; relating to the use of seines in fishing.

St. Paul, March 2.—Senator Wilson yesterday introduced a bill creating a permanent tax commission. The commission shall be composed of three members to be appointed by the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate. Each member shall devote his entire time to the office. Their salary is fixed at $6,000.

Senator Lundberg's bill relating to the reorganization of the forestry board, making the governor a member of the board, was passed under suspension of the rules.

Senator Hinton offered a bill which exempts wages not exceeding $30 due for services rendered during thirty days preceding from attachment, garnishment or levy of execution. If wages are paid at briefer intervals than thirty days the exemption shall be in the same proportion.

Senator Vail introduced a bill amending the law relating to the sale of timber on state land.

Other bills introduced: Relating to quarantine of animals; relating to proceedings for drainage of lands and meandered bodies of water; acceptance and administration of gifts and endowments for the benefit of educationable, charitable and other institutions maintained by the state; to prohibit the use of deception, misrepresentation, false advertising, false pretenses and unlawful force in the procuring of employes to work in any department of labor in this state, and fixing penalties, civil and criminal, for a violation thereof; providing for the election of one alderman at large in cities; establishment of county schools of agriculture, industrial science, manual training for school teachers, and appropriating money therefor; to empower villages and cities in this state to appoint gas inspectors.

In the House.

The resolution calling for an investigation into the charges of cruelty in insane asylums was referred to the committe on insane hospitals, with instructions to hold an investigation if it deemed it necessary.

The house had a wonderful streak of industry yesterday. An afternoon session was held at which forty bills were recommended for passage in committee of the whole.

Representative Dalzell introduced three bills for the regulation of sleeping car transportation. One prohibits the giving of tips to employes of the road. Another provides that the rate charged for upper berths shall not exceed 75 per cent of the price charged for lower berths. The third requires the sleeping car companies to furnish a safe, where the valuables of passengers may be stored.

Representative Timberlake offered a bill providing for the examination of the eyes and ears of all school children.

The house passed the memorial to congress for a constitutional convention to propose an amendment for the election of senators by direct vote of the people.

St. Paul, March 5.—There is nothing to warrant the charges in the joint resolution passed in the North Dakota legislature regarding the Minnesota grain inspection and warehouse laws, and the Minnesota legislature respectfully declines to amend the laws to conform to the wishes of the North Dakota legislators. This is the reply of the Minnesota legislature to the resolution from North Dakota. The reply is in the form of a joint resolution.

A petition against the enactment of a 2-cent fare law was received by the house from the Commercial club of Morton.

Villages may give franchises to electric railways to carry freight under a bill introduced by Representative Thayer.

Representative Murphy offered a bill providing for the appointment of a permanent tax commission.

Other bills introduced: Making 8 per cent the highest rate of interest allowed; regulating telegraph tariffs; prohibiting deception in securing employes; creating a bureau of statistics

In the Senate.

Senator Witherstine introduced a bill which relieves pharmacists from the payment of an annual fee of $2. The bill also contains some minor amendments to the present law relating to pharmacists.

Senator Canfield presented a bill which will give residents of cities of the fourth class something to say about the location of livery stables in the residence districts.

A bill to prevent the election of a majority of the officers of an incorporated village on a wave of popular sentiment on some particular subject, without due consideration of the qualifications of the candidates, was introduced by Senator Canestorp. The bill provides that the clerk and president shall be elected for two years, and in alternate years, while the three trustees shal leach be elected, one each year, for a three-year term. Under this plan a majority of the officers will at all times have been in office for a year or more.

St. Paul, March 6.—The senate yesterday unanimously passed a resolution directing the committee on railroads to report out the house 2-cent fare bill not later than Thursday of this week. The preamble related the fact of the passage of the two bills, each in their respective houses, and alleged that the legislature was anxious that this line of legislation should become effective.

Five petitions in favor of county options were presented.

A new liquor license law of far-reaching effect was introduced by Senator Vail. It provides that no license for the sale of liquors shall be granted to any person who is not in the actual possession in his own right as owner, or as the bona fide lessee of the room specified in the license. Whenever such license ceases to be in the actual bona fide possession of the room so specified, or ceases personally to manage such business, the license shall be deemed annulled.

Senator Alderman offered an amendment to the liquor law which makes the selling of liquor to a minor a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not less than $10 or more than $100, or by imprisonment for not less than ten days or more than ninety days.

The senate passed fourteen bills yesterday, most of them of minor importance. Among them was the bill to appropriate $250,000 to pay deficiencies in aid to high schools, graded, semi-graded and rural schools, the past two years. Another important bill passed was one making it compulsory for deaf children at eight years of age to be sent to the state school for the deaf at Faribault.

In the House.

No strings will be tied to the lobbyists by the present group of legislators, for they voted down the measure requiring the registration of lobbyists when it came up for passage yesterday. The death blow was administered by a vote of 42 to 67.

Another bill killed was that authorizing officers of corporations to administer oaths and take acknowledgments in matters in which they are interested.

The house had its working clothes on yesterday and made its first serious attempt to break the log jam of bills which is held up all along the line. Among the bills passed were the following: To punish persons who make false statements for the purpose of securing credit; appropriating money for the erection of monuments to the Third, Fourth and Fifth Minnesota infantry and the First battery on the battlefield of Vicksburg; requiring the payment of interest on delinquent gross earning taxes; creating the position of county weighmaster; prohibiting pawnbrokers and second-hand dealers from receiving valuable property from minors; restoring full citizenship to persons convicted of felony after they have served their time and complied with certain conditions.

Only three bills were introduced: Relating to temporary relief of the poor; relating to appropriations for expenses of county officers; providing for exemption of wages from garnishment.

CUT ON "PERISHABLES."

Perishable Goods Get the Lowest Rate in New Schedule Ordered.

One of the most important clauses of the order recently sent to the express companies operating in the state making a cut in express rates is that relating to perishable goods and other articles included under the head of "general specials." The reduction in these rates is marked, being 10 to 15 per cent lower than the rates on merchandise established by the new schedule, which itself represents a cut of 20 per cent in the old rates.

The rates on perishable goods are extremely low, and what makes this matter of importance is that while certain articles of merchandise, on which a higher rate must be paid, may be shipped only a few times a year, the perishable goods, on which the low rates have been fixed, are shipped by thousands of farmers throughout the state two and three times a week.

The cut in these rates was the greatest made by the commission, and it will mean thousands of dollars to the farmers and country shippers of the state every year.

The following table shows how the rates on perishable goods compare with the new rates on merchandise:

	Rates in Cents, Per —100 Lbs.—
Distance in Miles.	Mdse.	Perishable Goods.

LESS THAN HALF PASS.

Result of the Teachers' Examinations in the State.

Of 5,501 who took the teachers' examinations throughout the state the last week of January, 2,168 received certificates, according to figures just completed by State Superintendent jects, and therefore were not strictly says, to say that the others failed, as many of them did not write complete examinations, but only on some sub- J. W. Olsen. But it is hardly fair, he applicants for certificates. However, there were 30,367 papers written and 20,887 passed.

Of the certificates issued there were 181 complete first grade, good for five years, 87 conditional first grade, those who failed in one subject. These are good for one year. Of the second grade certificates there were 765 complete, good for two years; 612 conditional, good for one year, and 523 limited, issued to applicants who had no previous experience.

The number of papers written and the number passed in each subject is as follows:

	Papers.	Passed

STATE GETS $3,389,881.14.

Tax for 1906 on Gross Earnings of Railways.

The thirty-two railroads operating in Minnesota will pay into the state treasury in taxes for 1906 the sum of $3,389,881.14, an increase of $374,204.20 over 1905. The total gross earnings for the roads in 1906 were $84,741,848.03, while the total earnings in 1905 were $75,391,924.83, making an increase for 1906 of $9,349,923.20. Figuring on a basis of thirty-two roads, the average gross earnings per road would be $2,648,182.76, while the average taxes accruing to the state per road would be $105,933.79.

The largest gross earnings of any road was that of the Great Northern, $20,264,362.14, an increase of $1,723,065.87 over the year 1905. The smallest gross earnings reported by any road is $3.188.19 by the Green Bay & Western line. This is an increase of $287.89 over 1905, while the state tax, $127.53, is an increase of $11.52 over the preceding year.

DISPLAY OF CATTLE.

Leading Breeders of Country Will Exhibit at State Fair.

The three leading cattle breeders associations of the United States have now made appropriations for the Minnesota state fair live stock exhibition for next September, assuring a display of cattle of great size and of international interest.

Secretary E. W. Randall has just been notified that the American Hereford Breeders' association has set aside $500 for the show. This, with an equal amount offered by the Minnesota State Agricultural society, makes a total of $1,000 to be paid in premiums this year to owners of Hereford cattle alone

TWICE-TOLD TESTIMONY.

A Woman Who Has Suffered Tells How to Find Relief.

The thousands of women who suffer backache, languor, urinary disorders and other kidney ills, will find comfort in the words of Mrs. Jane Farrell, of 606 Ocean Ave., Jersey City, N. J., who says: "I reiterate all I have said before in praise of Doan's Kidney Pills. I had been having heavy backaches, and my general health was affected when I began using them. My feet were swollen, my eyes puffed, and dizzy spells were frequent. Kidney action was irregular and the secretions highly colored. To-day, however, I am a well woman, and I am confident that Doan's Kidney Pills have made me so, and are keeping me well."

Confronting the Condemned.

"I have," said a lawyer, as he entered his condemned client's cell, "good news at last."

"A reprieve?" eagerly asked the prisoner.

"No, not a reprieve, but your uncle has left you $2,500, and now you can meet your fate with the satisfying feeling that the noble efforts of your lawyer in your behalf will not go unrewarded."

Notions.

There is little romance to be derived from finding a hair in the butter, even when it is a golden hair.

Most of the man's troubles exist in his mind, but a great many in the form of I. O. U.'s exist on paper.

The man who has a good time when he is young will at least have something to talk of when he grows old.

While the way of the transgressor is hard, it is rarely so until he is found out.

Convention is a fence which is miles high to some people and less than a foot high to other people.

JUST HINTED.

Passenger Was Getting a Little Tired of Ethel.

The train was crowded. In one compartment a dignified, middle aged gentleman was trying to read. Among the passengers was a lady with a very sprightly little girl who had blue eyes, a head of blistening gold and an inquisitorial tongue. She asked the dignified gentleman innumerable questions and played with his watch chain. The mother fairly beamed upon him. He was becoming nervous, and turning to the lady said:

"Madame, what do you call this sweet child?"

The mother smiled, and replied: "Ethel."

"Please call her, then."

MORE BOXES OF GOLD

And Many Greenbacks.

325 boxes of Gold and Greenbacks will be sent to persons who write the most interesting and truthful letters of experience on the following topics:

1. How have you been affected by coffee drinking and by changing from coffee to Postum.
2. Give name and account of one or more coffee drinkers who have been hurt by it and have been induced to quit and use Postum.
3. Do you know any one who has been driven away from Postum because it came to the table weak and characterless at the first trial?
4. Did you set such a person right regarding the easy way to make it clear, black, and with a snappy, rich taste?
5. Have you ever found a better way to make it than to use four heaping teaspoonfuls to the pint of water, let stand on stove until real boiling begins, and beginning at that time when actual boiling starts, boil full 15 minutes more to extract the flavor and food value. (A piece of butter the size of a pea will prevent boiling over.)

This contest is confined to those who have used Postum prior to the date of this advertisement.

Be honest and truthful, don't write poetry or fanciful letters, just plain, truthful statements.

Contest will close June 1st, 1907, and no letters received after that date will be admitted. Examinations of letters will be made by three judges, not members of the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd. Their decisions will be fair and final, and a neat little box containing a $10 gold piece sent to each of the five writers of the most interesting letters, a box containing a $5 gold piece to each of the 20 next best, a $2 greenback to each of the 100 next best, and a $1 greenback to each of the 200 next best, making cash prizes distributed to 325 persons.

Every friend of Postum is urged to write and each letter will be held in high esteem by the company, as an evidence of such friendship, while the little boxes of gold and envelopes of money will reach many modest writers whose plain and sensible letters contain the facts desired, although the sender may have but small faith in winning at the time of writing.

Talk this subject over with your friends and see how many among you can win prizes. It is a good, honest competition and in the best kind of a cause, and costs the competitors absolutely nothing.

Address your letter to the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich., writing your own name and address clearly.

WHAT WESTERN CANADA DOES

Satisfactory Yields of Wheat and Good Prices.

Dundurn, Sask., Sept. 30, 1906.

Mr. W. H. Rogers, Canadian Government Agent,
Indianapolis, Ind.

My Dear Sir:

When you were at our place in July I promised to write you what my north quarter made per acre. You will remember it was all sown to wheat. Well, I finished threshing yesterday and received from it an average of 43¼ bushels per acre—testing 64½ pounds per stroked bushel. The wheat is the best sample I have ever raised—so uniform and even in size. You may know it was a good sample when I tell you that I have already sold 2,000 bushels of it for seed to my neighbors. This year has been my best effort in farming during my life. My wheat totaled 9,280 bushels and my oats nearly 5,000.

If you remember I pointed out to you a half section lying just west of our house and joining my upper quarter on the south, which I said I should have in order to make one of the best farms in western Canada. I am very glad to be able to tell you that I now own that half section. My ambition now is to be able to market 20,000 bushels of wheat next year. If some of those good, honest Hoosiers could have been with me during the last two weeks and could have seen the golden grain rushing down the spout into my wagon and then could have seen it in great piles in my granaries, I feel sure they would have been forced to acknowledge there is no better farming country in the world than this. I may just say that I have done all my farming with eight head of horses and one hired man except during harvest and threshing. This year I proved to my neighbor that the Hoosiers, when once "woke up," can raise grain equal to the best Minnesota farmers. His best yield was 42½ bushels per acre, so you see "old Indiana" is holding the ribbon this year.

Yours very truly,
N. E. BAUMINK.

In All Hotels.

Miss Simpleton—I understand that in some hotels one often sees palms about the dining rooms. What kind of a palm is the most prominent?

Mr. Dinewell—The waiter's.

No Cause for Worry.

"Suppose, doctor, this operation doesn't succeed?"

"My dear fellow, if it doesn't you'll never know it."

PREPARE THIS YOURSELF.

Tells How to Make the Best Blood Tonic at Home.

For those who have any form of blood disorders; who want new, rich blood and plenty of it, try this:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces.

Shake well in a bottle and take in teaspoonful doses after each meal and at bedtime. Any good pharmacy can supply the ingredients at small cost.

This is the prescription which, when made up, is called "The Vegetable Treatment;" by others, the "Cyclone Blood Purifier." It acts gently and certainly does wonders for some people who are sickly, weak and out of sorts, and is known to relieve serious, long-standing cases of rheumatism and chronic backache quickly.

Make some up and try it.

Anything But Silent.

Customer—Who's the "Co." in your firm?

Grocer—My wife.

Customer—Ah, I see! She's a sort of silent partner.

Grocer—Silent! Say, I guess you never met my wife, did you?

The Proof.

"Was the wedding a social success?"

"Yes, indeed. It gained the bride's dressmaker, twenty-seven new customers."

CHILDREN TORTURED.

Girl Had Running Sores from Eczema —Boy Tortured by Poison Oak— Both Cured by Cuticura.

"Last year, after having my little girl treated by a very prominent physician for an obstinate case of eczema, I resorted to the Cuticura Remedies, and was so well pleased with the almost instantaneous relief afforded that we discarded the physician's prescription and relied entirely on the Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment, and Cuticura Pills. When we commenced with the Cuticura Remedies her feet and limbs were covered with running sores. In about six weeks we had her completely well, and there has been no recurrence of the trouble.

"In July of this year a little boy in our family poisoned his hands and arms with poison oak, and in twenty-four hours his hands and arms were a mass of torturing sores. We used only the Cuticura Remedies, washing his hands and arms with the Cuticura Soap, and anointing them with the Cuticura Ointment, and then gave him the Cuticura Resolvent. In about three weeks his hands and arms healed up. So we have lots of cause for feeling grateful for the Cuticura Remedies. We find that the Cuticura Remedies are a valuable household standby, living as we do twelve miles from a doctor. Mrs. Lizzie Vincent Thomas, Fairmont, Walden's Ridge, Tenn., Oct. 13, 1905."

Girlhood and Scott's Emulsion are linked together.

The girl who takes Scott's Emulsion has plenty of rich, red blood; she is plump, active and energetic.

The reason is that at a period when a girl's digestion is weak, Scott's Emulsion provides her with powerful nourishment in easily digested form.

It is a food that builds and keeps up a girl's strength.

A Chicago judge advocates the burning of "cheap dance halls and theatres as a means of saving the youth of that city from vice." While they are at it, they might as well burn up a few tons of mail-order house catalogues, which advertise and sell "cheap" goods.

President Roosevelt at the head of active operations on the Panama canal work after his present term expires, and William J. Bryan in the White house, is a combination suggested by an exchange that will "make the dirt fly" both at home and on the canal.

John Alexander Dowie, "Elijah II", as he styled himself, died at his home in Zion City. Once rich and powerful, he died poor and almost alone. "Thus do the mighty perish."

A St. Cloud man returned to a store in that city $75 which he stated was for goods stolen. He must have been reading the railroad investigations.

We've found by experience that it makes a heap of difference whether you go to see the other fellow or whether he comes to you.

The air is full of investigations, subpoenas and indictments, but we notice there are damned few rich men in jail today.

People don't ask where you got the money, but "Have you got it."

The News—No Pure Drug Cough Cure Laws would be needed if all Cough Cures were like Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure is—and has been for 20 years. The National law now requires that if any poisons enter into a cough mixture, it must be printed on the label or package. For this reason. mothers, and others, should insist on having Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. No poison marks on Dr. Shoop's labels—and none in the medicine else it must by law be on the label. And it's not only safe, but it is said to be by those who know it best, a truly remarkable cough remedy. Take no chance, particularly with your children. Insist on having Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. Compare carefully the Dr. Shoop package with others and see. No poison marks there. You can always be on the safe side by demanding Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. Simply refuse to accept any other Sold by all dealers.

HOME MADE CATARRH CURE.

Any one can mix right at home the best remedy of its kind known. The name "Cyclone" is given to the following prescription, it is supposed, because of its promptness in driving from the blood and system every vestage of catarrhal poison, relieving this foul and dread disease, no matter where located. To prepare the mixture: Get from any good pharmacy one-half ounce Fluid Extract Dandelion, one ounce Compound Kargon and three ounces of Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla. Shake well and use in teaspoonful doses after each meal and at bedtime.

This is a harmless, inexpensive mixture, which has a peculiar action upon the eliminative tissues of the Kidneys, assisting them to filter and strain from the blood and system all catarrh poisons which, if not eradicated, are absorbed by the mucous membrane, and an open sore or catarrh is the result.

Prepare some and try it, as it is the prescription of an eminent catarrh specialist of national reputation.

DATES FOR COUNTY FAIR.

Exhibition Will Be Held on August 8th 9th and 10th. New Lease on Grounds.

The Red Lake County Fair is to be held early in the month of August as has been the custom for the past five years. Ever since the first exhibition which was held in October, the exhibition has been set for the first or second week in August, and on each occasion the weather has been good and the crowds in excess of expectations. The exact dates this year are August 8th, 9th and 10th.

There seems to be every reason to believe that the fair this year will be as good or better than heretofore but if it comes up to previous years it should satisfy the most exacting.

DO YOU KNOW

That the man who pities himself always is pitiable.

That it is easy to mistake a resolution for a reform.

That small talk is the generator of many big troubles.

That many a man loses his heart trying to get ahead.

That they are best remembered who forget themselves.

That every man has a right to keep his opinion to himself.

That the more a man knows at 40 the less he is apt to know at 60.

That the man who does no harm in the world does but little good.

That "easy money" is usually that which your neigebor makes.

That a drunkard feels very virtuous when abusing a dope fiend.

That he is wise who knows just what to say—and when not to say it.

That no man has power with men until he understands the patience of God.

That there are big black shadows behind the life that seeks the limelight.

That if a man thinks he can outwit a widow he is entitled to another think.

That a man does not get on the bright side of life by scouring his fellows.

That you may be sure you are wrong when some men are sure you are right.

That freckles are not half so pretty as blushes, but they are never counterfeit.

That it takes more than information to work the transformation of the world.

That you can't please everybody. A cheerful person is a pessimist's idea of a fool.

That consistency is a jewel that's missing from the diadem of many an earthly angel.

That the average man has more friends and fewer enemies than he thinks he has.

That it's impossible to love a man for the enemies he has made if you are on the list.

That folks who take life as a dose always want to prescribe for the rest of the world.

That your prayer check does not amount to much without the signature of your deeds.

That long suffering acquired by listening to the sermon will not help in the trials of the week.

That 300 years ago the people did think the world was square, but now everyone knows it's crooked.

That arguments as to the orthodoxy of the pattern of your lamp will not atone for its light being out.

That a sad, sweetfaced woman is almost as valuable to the defense, in a criminal case as an expert counsel.

That most men are a great deal more particular about not being called a liar than they are about not lying.

That the best prayer for your brother is not the one that rises to heaven but the one that brings you down to earth.

That you shouldn't insist that your children shall go to church unless you are willing to set a good example for them.

That our idea of a real hero is a man who can look his wife straight in the eye and tell her the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

That you shouldn't waste any time trying to get something for nothing. Adam got the apple without money and without price—and remember his finish.

HOME FROM WASHINGTON.

Congressman Steenerson Arrived in Crookston Monday Morning.

Congressman Halvor Steenerson, accompanied by Mrs. Steenerson returned Monday morning from Washington D. C. The session was rather a strenuous one for Mr. Steenerson. especially the closing days. Asked as to what he considered the most important legislation affecting this section, Mr. Steenerson said:

"I consider that the bill restoring thousands of acres of land to entry which had been withdrawn, one important measure. The land office officials here will soon receive instructions to receive filings on this land.

"The increase in salary for rural mail carriers from a maximum of $720 to $900 is also a good thing for the rural districts, as the former pay was inadequate. This will go into effect July 1st.

"The increase of the federal appropriation for the assistance of agricultural schools is also a good piece of legislation and while this money goes to the St. Anthony Park school in Minnesota the Crookston branch will be benefited indirectly.

"The free denatured alcohol bill will also give the small farmers an opportunity they never had before, as small distilleries can now be operated to advantage, and the public at the same time will have cheap alcohol for lighting and motor purposes to compete with gasoline.

"The defeat of the ship subsidy bill pleased me greatly, but it was only accomplished after a great fight.—Crookston Journal.

MORTALITY REPORT

CONSUMPTION AND PNEUMONIA HEAD DEATH LIST.

Statistics Show That the Greatest Number of Deaths From Lung Trouble Occur in Winter.

The Bureau of Census has published a report presenting mortality statistics for the United States for the five calendar years 1900 to 1904.

As shown in the table, tuberculosis of the lungs and pneumonia were by far the leading causes of death. The greatest number of deaths from lung trouble occur during the winter months. Colds are so prolific of lung trouble that they should not be neglected. Persons with weak lungs should be especially careful.

A noted authority on lung trouble advises that as soon as a cold is contracted the following simple treatment should be given. The ingredients can be purchased from any prescription druggist at small cost and easily prepared in your own home. It is said to be so effective that it will break up a cold in twenty-four hours and cure any cough that is curable.

Take one-half ounce Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure), two ounces of Glycerine and eight ounces of good Whisky. Shake well and take in teaspoonful doses every four hours.

Be sure that the Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure) is in the original half-ounce vials, which are put up expressly for druggists to dispense. Each vial is securely sealed in a round wooden case, with engraved wrapper, with the name —Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure)—guaranteed under the Food and Drugs Act, June 30, 1906, prepared only by Leach Chemical Co., Cincinnati, O.—plainly printed thereon. There are many rank imitations of Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure) which are put out under various names, such as Concentrated Oil of Pine, Pine Balsam, etc. Never accept these as a substitute for the Pure Virgin Oil of Pine, as they will invariably produce nausea and never effect the desired result.

To Memory Dear.

The Governess—Did you visit the Louvre while you were in Paris, ma'am?

Mrs. Newcoyne—I forget; did we, John?

Mr. Newcoyn—Why, I don't see how you can possibly forget that place, Jane. That's where you had your pocket picked.—Puck.

Garfield Tea, an absolutely pure and effective laxative! Made of Herbs. Take it to purify the blood, to overcome constipation and to eradicate rheumatism and chronic diseases.

A Little Too Much.

Miss Knox—Yes, he actually said your cheeks were like roses.

Miss Passay (coyly delighted)—Oh, come, now, that's laying it on pretty thick.

Miss Knox—Yes, he remarked about that, too.

Worse and Worse.

Father (sighing)—These ten years have I been waiting in the hope that my wife would give up playing the piano.

Friend—Well, and now——?

Father—Now my three daughters play.

His Average.

"Winter has many drawbacks," said Henry J. Woodhouse, the noted meteorologist in Washington, "and not least of these is the winter fog that drops down soot upon men's faces. Some day we shall dissipate this fog with electricity, but the day is distant."

Mr. Woodhouse smiled.

"In a restaurant, on a recent foggy, sooty day, I couldn't resist leaning over and whispering to a well dressed man at the next table:

"'Excuse me, sir, but there's a speck of soot on your nose.'

"The man smiled agreeably.

"'No,' he said. 'No, that isn't soot it is a peculiar kind of mole and you are the seventh man since breakfast to ask me to wash it off. My average for foggy days is ten.'"

COFFEE THRESHED HER.

15 Long Years.

"For over fifteen years," writes a patient, hopeful little Ills. woman, "while a coffee drinker, I suffered from Spinal Irritation and Nervous trouble. I was treated by good physicians, but did not get much relief.

"I never suspected that coffee might be aggravating my condition. I was downhearted and discouraged, but prayed daily that I might find something to help me.

"Several years ago while at a friend's house, I drank a cup of Postum and thought I had never tasted anything more delicious.

"From that time on I used Postum instead of coffee, and soon began to improve in health, so that now I can walk half a dozen blocks or more with ease, and do many other things that I never thought I would be able to do again in this world.

"My appetite is good, I sleep well, and find life worth living, indeed. A lady of my acquaintance said she did not like Postum, it was so weak and tasteless.

"I explained to her the difference when it is made right—boiled according to directions. She was glad to know this because coffee did not agree with her. Now her folks say they expect to use Postum the rest of their lives." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

BY CLARA AUGUSTA

CHAPTER VI.—(CONTINUED).

A hundred pairs of hands were outstretched to receive Margie when Arch brought her to the shore. Her dear devoted friends crowded around her, and in their joy at her escape, Arch retreated for his lodgings. But Miss Lee had been watching him, and seized his arm the moment he was clear of the crowd.

"Oh, Mr. Trevlyn, it's just like a novel!" she exclaimed, enthusiastically. "Only you cannot marry the heroine, for she is engaged to Mr. Linmere; and she perfectly dotes on him."

She flitted away, and Trevlyn went up to his chamber.

That evening there was a "hop" at the hotel, but Arch did not go down. He knew if he did the inevitable Miss Lee would anchor herself on his arm for the evening; and his politeness was not equal to the task of entertaining her.

The strains of music reached him, softened and made sweet by the distance. He stole down on the piazza, and sat under the shadows of a flowering vine, looking at the sky, with its myriads of glittering stars. There was a light step at his side, and glancing up, he saw Margie Harrison.

She was in evening dress, her white arms and shoulders bare, and glistening with snowy pearls. Her soft unbound hair fell over her neck in a flood of light, and a subtle perfume, like the breath of blooming water-lilies, floated around her.

"I want to make you my captive for a little while, Mr. Trevlyn," she said, gayly. "Will you wear the chains?"

"Like a garland of roses," he responded. "Yes, to the world's end, Miss Harrison!"

The unconscious fervor of his voice brought a crimson flush to her face. She dropped her eyes, and toyed with the bracelet on her arm.

"I did not know you dealt in compliments, Mr. Trevlyn," she said, a little reproackfully, "I thought you were always sincere."

"And so I am, Miss Harrison."

"I take you at your word then," she said, recovering her playful air. "You will not blame me, if I lead you into difficulty?"

"Certainly not. I give myself into your keeping."

She put her hand within his arm, and led him up the stairs, to a private parlor on the second floor. Under the jet of light sat old Mr. Trevlyn. Archer's heart throbbed fiercely, and his lips grew set and motionless as he stood there before the man he hated, the man against whom he had made a vow of undying vengeance. Margie was looking at her guardian, and did not observe the startling change which had come over Arch. She spoke softly, addressing the old man.

"Dear guardian, this is the man who this morning so gallantly rescued me from a watery grave. I want you to help me thank him."

Mr. Trevlyn arose, came forward, and extended his hand. Arch stood erect, his arms folded on his breast. He did not move, nor offer to take the proffered hand. Mr. Trevlyn gave a start of surprise, and seizing a lamp from the table, held it up to the face of the young man. Arch did not flinch; he bore the insulting scrutiny with stony calmness.

The old man dashed down the lamp, and put his hand to his forehead. His face was livid with passion, his voice choked so as to be scarcely audible.

"Margie, Margie Harrison!" he exclaimed, "what is this person's name?"

"Archer Trevlyn, sir," answered the girl, amazed at the strange behavior of the two men.

"Just as I thought! Hubert's son!"

"Yes," said Arch, speaking with painful calmness, "I am Hubert's son; the son of the man your wicked cruelty murdered."

Mr. Trevlyn seized his cane and rushed upon his grandson; but Margie sprang forward and threw her arm across the breast of Arch.

"Strike him, if you dare!" she said, "but you shall strike a woman!"

Mr. Trevlyn looked at her and the weapon dropped to the floor.

"Margaret Harrison," he said sternly, "leave this room. This is no place for you. Obey me!"

"I am subject to no man's authority," she said, boldly; "and I will not leave the room. You shall not insult a gentleman to whom I owe my life, and who is here as my invited guest!"

"I shall defend myself! There is murder in that fellow's eye, if I ever saw it in that of any human being!"

"I am answerable for his conduct," she said with proud dignity. "He will do nothing of which a lady need stand in fear. I brought him here, ignorant of the relationship existing between you and him, and unconscious of the truth that I should be called upon to defend him from the causeless rage of his own grandfather."

Again the cane was uplifted, but Margaret laid her hand resolutely upon it.

"Give it to me. Will you—you who pride yourself upon your high and delicate sense of honor—will you be such an abject coward as to strike a defenseless man?"

He yielded her the weapon, and she threw it from the window.

"You may take away my defence, Margaret," said the old man, resolutely, "but you shall not prevent me from cursing him! A curse be upon him—"

"Hold, sir? Remember that your head is white with the snows of time. It will not be long before you go to the God who sees you every moment, who will judge you for every sin you commit."

"You may preach that stuff to the dogs! There is no God! I defy him and you! Archer Trevlyn, my curse be upon you and yours, now and forever! Child of a disobedient son! child of a mother who was a harlot——."

Arch sprang upon him with a savage cry. His hand was on his throat—God knows what crime he would have done, fired by the insult offered to the memory of his mother, had not Margie caught his hands, and drawn them away.

"Oh, Archer, Archer Trevlyn!" she cried, imploringly, "grant me this one favor—the very first I ever asked of you! For my sake, come away. He is an old man. Leave him to God, and his own conscience. You are young and strong; you would not disgrace your manhood by laying violent hands on the weakness of old age!"

"Did you hear what he called my mother, the purest woman the world ever saw? No man shall repeat that foul slander in my presence, and live!"

"He will not repeat it. Forgive him. He is fretful, and thinks the world has gone hard with him. He has sinned, and those who sin suffer always. It has been a long and terrible feud between him and yours. I brought you here—let me take you away."

Her soft hands were on his—her beautiful tear-wet eyes lifted to his face. He could not withstand that look. He would have given up the plans of a lifetime, if she had asked him with those imploring eyes.

"I yield to you, Miss Harrison—only to you," he replied. "If John Trevlyn lives, he owes his life to you. He judged rightly—there was murder in my soul, and he saw it in my eyes. Years ago, after they laid my poor heart-broken mother out of my sight, I swore a terrible vow of vengeance on the old man whose cruelty had hurried her into the grave. But for you, I should have kept the vow this moment. But I will obey you. Take me wherever you will."

She led him down the stairs, across the lawn, and out on the lonely beach, where the quiet moon and the passionless stars dropped down their crystal rain. The sweet south wind blew up cool from the sea, and afar off the tinkle of a sheep-bell stirred the silence of the night. The lamp in the distant lighthouse gleamed like a spark of fire, and at their feet broke the tireless billows, white as the snowdrifts of December.

CHAPTER VII.

THERE was something inexpressgbly soothing in the serenity of the night. Arch felt its influence. The hot color died out of his cheek, his pulse beat slower, he lifted his eyes to the purple arch of the summer sky.

"All God's universe is at rest," said Margie, her voice breaking upon his ear like a strain of music. "Oh, Archer Trevlyn, be at peace with all mankind!"

"I am—with all but him."

"And with him, also. The heart which bears malice cannot be a happy heart. There has been a great wrong done—I have heard the sad story—but it is divine to forgive. The man who can pardon the enemy who has wrought him evil, rises to a height where nothing of these earthly temptations can harm him more. He stands on a level with the angels of God. If you have been injured, let it pass. If your parents were hurried out of the world by his cruelty, think how much sooner they tasted the bliss of heaven! Every wrong will in due time be avenged. Justice will be done, for the Infinite One has promised it. Leave it in His hands. Archer, before I leave you, promise to forgive Mr. Trevlyn."

"I cannot! I cannot!" he cried, hoarsely. "Oh, Margie, Miss Harrison, ask of me anything but that, even to the sacrifice of my life, and I will willingly oblige you, but not that! not that!"

"That is all I ask. It is for your good and my peace of mind that I demand it. You have no right to make me unhappy, as your persistence in this dreadful course will do. Promise me, Archer Trevlyn!"

She put her hand on his shoulder; he turned his head and pressed his lips upon it. She did not draw it away, but stood, melting his hard heart with her wonderfully sweet gaze. He yielded all at once—she knew she had conquered. He sank down on one knee before her, and bowed his face upon his hands. She stooped over him, her hair swept his shoulders, the brown mingling with the deeper chestnut of his curling locks.

"You will promise me, Mr. Trevlyn?"

"What will you give me if I promise?"

"Ask for it."

He lifted a curl of shining hair.

"Yes," she said. "Promise me what I ask, and I will give it to you."

He took his pocket-knife and severed the tress.

"I promise you. I forgive you. I seek no revenge. I forgive John Trevlyn, and may God forgive him also. He is safe from me. I submit to have my parents sleep on unavenged. I leave him and his sins to the God whom he denies; and all because you have asked it of me."

Slowly and silently they went up to the house. At the door he said no good-night—he only held her hand a moment, closely, and then turned away.

Paul Linmere's wedding-day drew near. Between him and Margie there was no semblance of affection. Her coldness never varied, and after a few fruitless attempts to excite in her some manifestation of interest, he took his cue from her, and was as coldly indifferent as herself.

A few days before the tenth of October, which was the day appointed for the bridal, Dick Turner, one of Paul's friends, gave a supper at the Bachelors' club. A supper in honor of Paul, or to testify the sorrow of the club at the loss of one of its members. It was a very hilarious occasion, and the toasting and wine-drinking extended far into the small hours.

In a somewhat elevated frame of mind, Mr. Paul Linmere left the rooms of the club at about three o'clock in the morning, to return home. His way lay along the most deserted part of the city—a place where there were few dwellings, and the buildings were mostly stores and ware-houses.

Suddenly a touch on his arm stopped him. The same cold, deathly touch he had felt once before. He had drank just enough to feel remarkably brave, and turning, he encountered the strangely gleaming eyes that had frozen his blood that night in early summer. All his bravado left him. He felt weak and helpless as a child.

"What is it? what do you want?" he asked brokenly.

"Justice!" said the mysterious presence.

"Justice? For whom?"

"Arabel Vere."

"Arabel Vere! Curse her!" he cried savagely.

The figure lifted a spectral white hand.

"Paul Linmere—beware! The vengeance of the dead reaches sometimes unto the living! There is not water enough in the Seine to drown a woman's hatred. Death itself cannot annihilate it! Beware!"

He struck savagely at the uplifted hand, but his arm met no resistance. He beat only against the impalpable air. His spectral visitor had flown, and left nothing behind her to tell of her presence.

With unsteady steps Mr. Paul Linmere hurried home, entered his room, and double-locked the door behind him.

CHAPTER VIII.

MR. TREVLYN had decided that the marriage of his ward should take place at Harrison Park, the old country seat of the Harrisons, on the Hudson. Here Margarie's parents had lived always in the summer; here they had died within a week of each other, and here, in the cypress grove by the river, they were buried. There would be no more fitting place for the marriage of their daughter to be solemnized. Margie neither opposed nor approved the plan. She did not oppose anything. She was passive, almost apathetic.

The admiring dressmakers and milliners came and went, fitting and measuring, and trying on their tasteful creations, but without eliciting any signs of interest or pleasure from Margarie Harrison. She gave no orders, found no fault; expressed no admiration nor its opposite. It was all the same to her.

The bridal dress came home a few days before the appointed day. It was a superb affair, and Margarie looked like a queen in it. It was of white satin, with a point lace overskirt; looped at intervals with tiny bouquets of orange blossoms.

An Electric Palace.

The palatial New York home of Charles T. Yerkes, the Chicago millionaire, at 68th street and 5th avenue, has not only the most complete electric lighting, heating and ventilating plant of any of the several electrically equipped mansions in the city, but it has the largest storage battery plant ever installed in a private residence. A gas engine of thirty-five horse power in the basement is belted to a dynamo. The storage battery consists of sixty cells, having a capacity of 2,500 ampere hours at a ten-hour discharge rate, the maximum discharge rate being 500 amperes for four hours.

The house is wired for about sixteen candle-power lamps and has besides an electric passenger elevator and several electric motors for ventilation, pumping and other purposes.

The arrangement of the lights is very artistic. The vestibule or reception hall is lighted from above through cathedral glass in the base of a dome by 300 lights. Lamps are concealed within the carving of the principal salon or in rosettes of colored glass and cunningly placed in the ceilings. In the library an apparently framed oil painting, which is really a wonderful piece of cathedral glasswork, is made the vehicle of the flood of light which illuminates the room with the soft radiance of day.—Exchange.

Exchange Birthday Gifts.

The Prince of Wales and the Duc de Chartres have just exchanged birthday presents, according to their custom of many years past, as their birthdays fall on the same day. The Orleans prince is the elder by a year, however. The prince sent the duke a fine gun, while the duke's souvenir to the prince was a gold cigarette case.

TIRED AND SICK YET MUST WORK

"Man may work from sun to sun but woman's work is never done."

In order to keep the home neat and pretty, the children well dressed and tidy, women overdo and often suffer in silence, drifting along from bad to worse, knowing well that they ought to have help to overcome the pains and aches which daily make life a burden.

It is to these women that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, comes as a blessing. When the spirits are depressed, the head and back aches, there are dragging-down pains, nervousness, sleeplessness, and reluctance to go anywhere, these are only symptoms which unless heeded, are soon followed by the worst forms of Female Complaints.

MRS. AUG. LYON

keeps the feminine organism ina strong and healthy condition. It cures Inflammation, Ulceration, displacements, and organic troubles. In preparing for child-birth and to carry women safely through the Change of Life it is most efficient.

Mrs. Augustus Lyon, of East Earl, Pa., writes:— Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—"For a long time I suffered from female troubles and had all kinds of aches and pains in the lower part of back and sides. I could not sleep and had no appetite. Since taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and following the advice which you gave me I feel like a new woman and I cannot praise your medicine too highly."

Mrs. Pinkham's Invitation to Women

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to write Mrs Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Out of her vast volume of experience she probably has the very knowledge that will help your case. Her advice is free and always helpful.

A Bad Break.

"That was a bad break," said an automobilist, apropos of an embarrassing error. "It reminds me of the automobile dinner W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., gave last year.

"It was a large dinner of 200 covers or more, and some of the invitations were to motorists that Mr. Vanderbilt only knew slightly. A declination that he received ran like this:

"'Mr. T. Willie Fluble died last March, or he would no doubt have taken great pleasure in accepting Mr. Vanderbilt's kind invitation for dinner Thursday.'"

"Judge not," he said. "Judge not," and paused and sighed.

"Lest ye be roasted in the magazines," he added.

WEAK, PALE, THIN

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Restored Mrs. Robbins To Health and Also Cured Her Daughter of Anaemia.

Mrs. Jocie Robbins, of 1121 Clar St., Decatur, Ill., says: "I was weak, thin and troubled with headaches. My appetite failed so that I did not relish my food. I was unable to do my work because my limbs pained me so and my feet were swollen. I got numb and dizzy, my tongue seemed at times to be paralyzed so that I couldn't speak distinctly. My extremities, when in this numb state, felt as if some one was sticking needles into me all over their surface. Through my shoulders at times I had such pain that I couldn't sleep. Many times I awoke with a smothering sensation.

"When the physician's remedies failed to benefit me I began to look for something that would. My sister, Mrs. McDaniel, of Decatur, recommended Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to me and I at once purchased some. I was greatly encouraged when I saw how they acted on my nervous condition and continued using them until cured. I am now able to attend to my duties and have not consulted a physician since.

"I also gave them to my daughter who had always been weak and who at this time seemed to lack vitality. Her cheeks were colorless and she was thin and spiritless. She had anaemia and we feared consumption, because every time she went out doors if it was at all cold or damp she would take cold and cough. But Dr. Williams' Pink Pills brought color back to her cheeks and strength to her body."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or sent postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

PLOT TO KILL THE CZAR UNCOVERED

PLUNGES NICHOLAS INTO TERROR, AND HE STAYS AWAY FROM DUMA OPENING.

TROOPS RIDE DOWN CROWDS

MONSTER REVOLUTIONARY DEMONSTRATION — GENDARMES UES WHIPS.

St. Petersburg, March 7.—A plot to kill the czar in case he should attend the opening of the duma, it is declared, was uncoverered within twenty-four hours of the opening.

This, it is said, was what kept the czar from attending the opening.

The discovery plunged Nicholas into terror.

Terrorists Break Loose.

The opening yesterday of the duma, or lower house of the Russian parliament, although in itself devoid of incident, was made the occasion of a great revolutionary demonstration by the St. Petersburg proletariat and the students of the city, which resulted in several encounters between the police and the populace, and more or less serious injury to a number of the latter.

Fill Streets With Troops.

The situation was such that the authorities finally were forced to fill the streets with military patrols, as in the ominous days of the Trepoff regime.

After the adjournment of the session of the house a tumultuous crowd, estimated to number close to 40,000 persons, with red banners flying and accompanied by the music of revolutionary chants, started, like the followers of Father Gupon on Jan. 22, 1905, toward the central quarter of the city, where the winter palace of the emperor is located.

Like "Red Sunday."

Few elements of the prelude of "Red Sunday" were lacking, and the command "Fire!" would have precipitated a similar massacre. But the present prefect of St. Petersburg, Gen. Dracheffski, followed another course and dispersed the procession by charges of mounted gendarmes armed with whips and by imposing display of force he prevented the demonstrators from re forming.

Premier Fears Assassination.

It was learned last night that Premier Stolypin, in order to diminsh his chances of possible assassination, would spend the night in the Tauride palace, and it is understood that he had taken a suite of rooms in a wind of the palace, which he will occupy as long as parliament is in session.

OTHER NATIONS JOIN FIGHT.

All Central America United Against Nicaragua.

Tegucigalpa, Honduras, March 7. — The army of Honduras is mobilized on the frontier, under the personal command of President Bonilla, who left a sick bed to take command of the army. His arrival at the front has inspired the troops with enthusiasm for active operations against Nicaragua.

A strong column of Hondurian troops has invaded Nicaragua through the department of Ocotal.

On March 3 a force of Hondurians attacked and defeated 400 Nicaraguan troops at Old Depilto and captured fifty prisoners and a quantity of rifles and field-gun ammunition. The loss to the Hondurians was small.

The general opinion is that Honduras will eventually triumph.

Troops Advance Fast.

Mobile, Ala., March 7.—The Thacker line steamer Mercator arrived yesterday from Porto Cortez, Spanish Honduras. According to statements of passengers Nicaraguan forces are on Honduras soil in great numbers and making rapid advances.

American Ships Go South.

Washington, March 7. — The United States gunboat Princeton has been ordered to Central America to assist the cruiser Chicago in looking after American interests threatened by the war between Nicaragua and Honduras. It also has been decided to send either the Dubuque or the Paducah to Bluefields, Nicaragua, to assist the Marietta in looking after American interests on the Caribbean side of Central America.

Other Nations May Join.

News received here yesterday is disquieting in the extreme to the officials who had been hoping that the trouble between Nicaragua and Honduras could be localized and soon terminated by arbitration. It is now stated that there is every indication that Salvador, Guatemala and Costa Rica will join forces with Honduras, making a combination of all the other Central American countries against the single state of Nicaragua.

Fire Evicts Officers.

Havana, March 6.—Fire broke out yesterday afternoon in the officers' quarters at Camp Columbia. Two houses, occupied by sixty-five officers, were destroyed. Lieut. Wilhelm and two privates sustained injuries.

Archie Doing Nicely.

Washington, March 6. — Dr. Rixey visited the White House last night, and as he was leaving said: "Archie is getting along nicely. His condition is not serious and there is no reason for alarm."

MOTHER TO BE NEXT WITNESS

MRS. WILLIAM THAW'S TESTIMONY WILL COMPLETE THE DEFENSE.

New York, March 6.—A long stride forward in the trial of Harry K. Thaw was taken yesterday when District Attorney Jerome announced that his exhaustive cross-examination of Dr. Britton D. Evans, one of the alienists for the defense, had been concluded. Dr. Evans had been under fire since Wednesday morning last. He was immediately succeeded on the stand by Dr. Charles G. Wagner of Binghamton, N. Y., who accompanied Dr. Evans on most of his visits to Thaw in the Tombs. Mr. Jerome indicated by his questioning of Dr. Wagner that he may conclude to-day.

Mother Next Witness.

Mrs. William Thaw is expected to be the next figure in the witness chair. With Mrs. Thaw's testimony in, the defense will practically complete its case, and it is likely that the state's case in rebuttal may be begun before the end of the week.

Dr. Evans left the witness stand yesterday subject to recall for a direct examination. The witness protected the interests of the defense quite keenly throughout his cross-examination and at all times appeared to be a match for the district attorney.

Had Insane Knowledge of Act.

Dr. Evans yesterday, however, admitted that Thaw had an insane knowledge of what he was doing on Madison Square roof garden the night he shot and killed Stanford White.

Dr. Wagner declared that Thaw had irrational knowledge of what was transpiring on the roof garden. He believed the man's insanity dated from the time Evelyn Nesbit told him her story in Paris, in 1903.

Dr. Wagner Still on Stand.

New York, March 7. — Interest aroused in yesterday's session of the trial of Harry K. Thaw by the announcement that Mrs. William Thaw, the mother of the defendant, would take the witness stand, was quickly dulled by the continued cross-examination of Dr. Charles G. Wagner by District Attorney Jerome. Dr. Wagner was on the stand the entire day, and when adjournment was announced the district attorney seemed to have much ground yet to cover with the expert.

Judge and Jerome Clash.

Yesterday's session was made notable by a clash between District Attorney Jerome and Justice Fitzgerald, at the climax of which the prosecuting officer refused point blank to cite to the court the authorities upon which he was predicating an argument.

"I have such a high respect for the courts of this jurisdiction," retorted Mr. Jerome, "that I will not submit authorities on a question of law which is so elemental in character and upon which the authorities are so abundant that I must presume the learned court knows of them."

Judge's Ire Aroused.

With flushed face and a sharp rap of his gavel, Justice Fitzgerald said if the district attorney did not submit the authorities the court would assume that he did not know of any. Mr. Jerome did not submit the authorities and Justice Fitzgerald ruled in favor of the defense on the point at issue, which, briefly stated, was the question as to whether the state on cross-examination should be allowed to go farther with an expert witness than counsel for the defense was allowed to go upon direct examination.

Questions Are Technical.

Dr. Wagner was allowed to give his conversations with Thaw during the period that he believed the defendant to be of unsound mind. He said Thaw remembered having approached and having shot White. He protested, however, that he had not intended at any time to kill the man, but wanted to have him legally punished.

Much of the day was given over to technical questions concerning the mental and physical examinations to which Thaw was subjected in the Tombs by Drs. Wagner and Evans.

MILLIONS TO SLAY YAQUIS.

Mexico Mining King Offers to Equip Regiment to Exterminate Indians.

Galveston, Tex., March 7.—A statement from President Diaz recently that he would die happy if he knew Mexico was free from every Yaqui Indian has prompted Pedro Alvaredo, the mining king of Parral, Chihuahua, to come to his country's aid. He offers to spend $10,000,000 for the equipment and maintenance of a regiment of Indian fighters and scouts, to devote their entire efforts hunting and dispatching these murderous red devils, who he declares are a curse to Mexico and her industries.

Iowa Boy Kidnapped?

Dover, Del., March 7. — The four-year-old son of Dr. H. W. Marvin, recently of Sioux City, Iowa, disappeared from home and has not yet been found. Kidnapping is suspected.

NEW CABINET HAS SESSION.

Washington, March 7. — James R. Garfield took the oath of office as secretary of the interior at 9:45 o'clock this morning.

Secretary Hitchcock, who retires as secretary of the interior, was present.

Postmaster General Meyer and Secretary of the Interior Garfield attended their first cabinet meeting. Former Postmaster General Cortelyou was present for the first time in his new capacity as secretary of the treasury.

The Value and Importance of Ethical Remedies.

Remedies which physicians sanction for family use, as they act most beneficially and are gentle yet prompt in effect, and called ethical, because they are of Known Excellence and Quality and of Known Component Parts.

To gain the full confidence of the Well-Informed of the world and the approval of the most eminent physicians, it is essential that the component parts be known to and approved by them, and, therefore, the California Fig Syrup Company has published for many years past in its advertisements and upon every package a full statement thereof. The perfect purity and uniformity of product which they demand in a laxative remedy of an ethical character are assured by the California Fig Syrup Company's original method of manufacture, known to the Company only.

There are other ethical remedies approved by physicians, but the product of the California Fig Syrup Company possesses the advantage over all other family laxatives that it cleanses, sweetens and relieves the internal organs on which it acts, without disturbing the natural functions or any debilitating after effects and without having to increase the quantity from time to time.

This valuable remedy has been long and favorably known under the name of Syrup of Figs, and has attained to world-wide acceptance as the most excellent of family laxatives, and as its pure laxative principles, obtained from Senna, are well known to physicians and the Well-Informed of the world to be the best of natural laxatives, we have adopted the more elaborate name of Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, as more fully descriptive of the remedy, but doubtlessly it will always be called for by the shorter name of Syrup of Figs; and to get its beneficial effects, always note, when purchasing, the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—plainly printed on the front of every package, whether you simply call for Syrup of Figs, or by the full name, Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, as Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna is the one laxative remedy manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Company, and the same heretofore known by the name, Syrup of Figs, which has given satisfaction to millions. The genuine is for sale by all leading druggists throughout the United States in original packages of one size only, the regular price of which is fifty cents per bottle.

Every bottle is sold under the general guarantee of the Company, filed with the Secretary of Agriculture, at Washington, D. C., the remedy is not adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of the Food and Drugs Act, June 30th, 1906.

OLD SORES FED AND KEPT OPEN BY IMPURITIES IN THE BLOOD

Whenever a sore refuses to heal it is because the blood is not pure and healthy, as it should be, but is infected with poisonous germs or some old blood taint which has corrupted and polluted the circulation. Those most usually afflicted with old sores are persons who have reached or passed middle life. The vitality of the blood and strength of the system have naturally begun to decline, and the poisonous germs which have accumulated because of a sluggish and inactive condition of the system, or some hereditary taint which has hitherto been held in check, now force an outlet on the face, arms, legs or other part of the body. The place grows red and angry, festers and eats into the surrounding tissue until it becomes a chronic and stubborn ulcer, fed and kept open by the impurities with which the blood is saturated. Nothing is more trying and disagreeable than a stubborn, non-healing sore. The very fact that it resists ordinary remedies and treatments is good reason for suspicion; the same germ-producing cancerous ulcers is back of every old sore, and especially is this true if the trouble is an inherited one. Washes, salves, nor indeed anything else, applied directly to the sore, can do any permanent good; neither will removing the sore with caustic plasters or the surgeon's knife make a lasting cure. If every particle of the diseased flesh were taken away another sore would come, because the trouble is in the blood, and the BLOOD CANNOT BE CUT AWAY. The cure must come by a thorough cleansing of the blood. In S. S. S. will be found a remedy for sores and ulcers of every kind. It is an unequalled blood purifier—one that goes directly into the circulation and promptly cleanses it of all poisons and taints. It gets down to the very bottom of the trouble and forces out every trace of impurity and makes a complete and lasting cure. S. S. S. changes the quality of the blood so that instead of feeding the diseased parts with impurities, it nourishes the irritated, inflamed flesh with healthy blood. Then the sore begins to heal, new flesh is formed, all pain and inflammation leaves, the place scabs over, and when S. S. S. has purified the blood the sore is permanently cured. S. S. S. is for sale at all first class drug stores. Write for our special book on sores and ulcers and any other medical advice you desire. We make no charge for the book or advice.

I was afflicted with a sore on my face of four years' standing. It was a small pimple at first but it gradually grew larger and worse in every way until I became alarmed about it and consulted several physicians. They all treated me but the sore continued to grow worse. I saw S. S. S. advertised and commenced its use and after taking it a while I was completely cured. My blood is now pure and healthy from the effect of S. S. S., and there has not been any sign of the sore since S. S. S. cured it.

WHAT ADVERTISING WILL DO

Especially Exemplified in the Case of Harry Mitchell, Minneapolis' Famous Tailor.

It would be difficult to find a better exemplification of what good and persistent advertising will do for a man with the goods back of him than the case of Harry Mitchell, Minneapolis' popular tailor.

You will notice we said "with the goods back of him" for there is probably no tailor in the Twin Cities that carries a quarter of the stock that Harry Mitchell does, and the fabrics being purchased from the foremost mills of America and Europe, the quality is absolutely assured.

Five years ago Mr. Mitchell was conducting a tailor shop on the second floor of a building in Chicago, making a specialty of the finer class of work. He had been in this business seven years.

One day he woke up to the fact that Minneapolis was a pretty good kind of a town, and as the western fever grew upon him, he decided to pull up stakes and move his belongings here.

He started out in Minneapolis in a small way—growing, growing, till today he is one of the largest tailors in the United States.

His success is due entirely to the fact that he is scrupulously honest—always giving a little more rather than a little less in all his transactions.

He conducts his business on a strictly cash basis, and no matter who the customer may be—banker or laborer—the goods must be paid for when delivered. This has been a very potent factor in the building up of his business, for there are no bad accounts standing out, no collectors fees to pay, and no "dead beats to write off on the wrong side of the ledger.

His store is located at 310 Nicollet avenue, is absolutely up-to-date in every respect, and the arrangement for exhibiting the enormous stock is commented on by every one who enters. The fitting or trying on room is furnished in a most luxurious manner, every detail being studied out for the comfort of the customer.

Mr. Mitchell's work rooms, where two hundred and forty people are employed, are located at Hennepin and Fourth street. There are no better, more commodious, more sanitary tailoring quarters in the world than those provided by Harry Mitchell for his employees. Every thing runs like clockwork, and it would be hard to find a more contented, happier bunch than work there.

Mr. Mitchell has always been an advocate of paying a man good wages, and probably no other tailor in the country employs such high-priced cutters as he does. He believes in getting the best that money can buy. He has absolutely no use for a man unless he's a past-master at his business, and that is why Harry Mitchell has no fear in putting on his shingle "Satisfaction or no Pay."

His customers include some of the best dressers in Minneapolis but it makes no difference to Mr. Mitchell whether the customer is a banker, a railroad president or a $15-a-week clerk, they all get the same pains-taking attention.

That Harry Mitchell has absolutely become famous for his made-to-order $15, $20 and $25 suits and overcoats is an established fact—not only in Minnesota but in all the surrounding states. His mail order business has grown so rapidly in the past two years that it became imperative for him to enlarge his quarters. He prides himself on his perfected measurement system, and says it makes no difference where a man may live, he can fit him just as well as if he took his measure himself.

As previously said, Mr. Mitchell, is a stanch believer in publicity. He says you can't catch fish without a bait, and he doesn't see how the public is going to know what you've got to give then unless you tell them.—Minneapolis Journal.

Modern Court Jester.

Consuelo, Duchess of Manchester, (Consuelo Yznaga, widow of the duke) is such a favorite of King Edward and Queen Alexandra on account of her ready wit and amiability that no sooner had she landed in England from her cruise in the Mediterranean on F. W. Vanderbilt's yacht, the Warrior, than she received a wire from Balmoral commanding her to stay a few days. A few years ago the duchess was asked by an American friend why she was so popular with royalty. "Well," she replied, "I am the court jester. I don't get a salary, but I feel I should earn one if there were any about."

"Preventics" will promptly check a cold or the grippe when taken early or at the "sneeze stage." Preventics cure seated colds as well. Preventics are little candy cold cure tablets, and Dr Shoop, Racine, Wis., will gladly mail you samples and a book on colds free, if you will write him. The samples prove their merit. Dairy Industry Grows.

Warren Sheaf: The dairy industry in the Red River valley has had a phenomenal growth during the past two or three years. Successful creameries by the score are now scattered about throughout the valley, and the time will come at no distant day when every township will have one or more creameries in operation. Farmers and business men are turning to the dairy industry as the most profitable branch of farming. Dairy products always bring a good price when good and rightly prepared for the market, and there does not seem to be much danger of over production. Some may have an idea that owing to the long winters dairying cannot be successfully carried on here, but that is a mistake. The fact that the Warren creamery and other creameries in this section have been in operation and made money this winter proves that winter dairying is a success. It is diversified farming and not exclusive wheat raising that will make the fertile soil of the Red River Valley yield the best returns.

Java's Precious Teak Trees.

The chief wealth of the forests of Java at the present time, consists in the wood of the teak-tree, which is extensively employed for naval construction. The trees are ordinarily cut when they have attained the age of about 50 years. The species most esteemed has wood of a brown color possessing a greasy feeling to the touch. EXPRESS RATES LOWER.

Great Northern and Northern Pacific Companies Make Voluntary Reductions.

In accordande with the recent order the express companies doing business in northern Minnesota announce a sweeping reduction in rates thls week. Nhe reduction will average about 25 per cent, being on all classes of goods. Rites have heretofore been very high, and and the general public will easily believe that the companies can well afford to cut down their prices. The recent investigation of express rates by the legislature as doubtless responsible for this relief from excessive changes.

Hamilton Meetings.

Rev. John S. Hamilton, the well known evangelist, accompanied by Prof. John R. Bursk, an Evangelistic singer, will begin Revival Services at the Presbyterian church next Tuesday evening, March 26th. The meetings will continue for two weeks, closing on Sunday night, April 7th. The meetings will begin at eight o'clock in the evening. Prof. Cursk will lead a large chorus choir which will be assisted, whenever possible, by members of the orchestra. He will sing one or more sacred solos each evening. Mr. Hamilton is a powerful preacher, and has always filled the largest building in every town where hd has conducted services.

EMARDVILLE.

The farmers are beginning to plan their spring work.

P. S. Medchill is the new member of the town board.

The ladies' sewing society had their last meeting with Mrs. Froiland.

Adolph Charpentier has been very busy hauling hay and wood all winter.

Very little cordwood is put up this year. Snow is deep and choppers scarce.

The Town board met at the town clerk's office yesterday. It was the first meeting of the year.

The township election is over but all are talking new bridge and good road to Red Lake Falls and to the Terrebonne mill.

For Catarrh, let me send you free just to prove merit, a trial size box of Dr. Shoop's Catarrh Remedy. It is a snow white, creamy, healing antiseptic balm that gives instant relief to Catarrh of the nose and throat. Make the free test and see. Address Dr. Shoop, Racine, Wis. Large jars 50 cents. Sold by all dealers.

Big Day for Creamery.

St. Hilaire Spectator: Buttermaker Geo. L. Austin reports the biggest day of the year on Friday of last week, when the creamery received 5,600 pounds of cream in one day. Both churns had to be started up to handle this large amount.

Considering the time of the year and the backward condition of the spring this shewing is truly remarkable. It is by far the largest amount of cream ever receive by any other northern Minnesota creamery in any one day during the winter.

Are you tired, fagged out, nervous, sleepless, feel mean? Hollister's Rocky Mountain Tea strengthens the nervous, aids digestion, brings refreshing sleep. 35 cents, Tea or Tablets. A. L. Reichert.

AWFUL LOSS ON FRENCH WARSHIP

POWDER MAGAZINES ON BATTLESHIP IENA BLOW UP AT TOULON.

DEATH LOSS IS ABOUT 100

VICTIMS ARE HURLED THROUGH AIR—HUNDREDS HORRIBLY INJURED.

Toulon, March 14. — The powder magazines on board the French battleship Iena blew up yesterday afternoon, and as a result Capt. Adigard, the commander of the battleship; Capt. Verries, some of them horrible in their exnean squadron, and from seventy to eighty bluejackets are dead, while Rear Admiral Manceron and hundreds of other men are suffering from injuries, some of the horrible in their extent. Naval circles are aghast and the public is stunned by the appalling catastrophe.

Victims Hurled Through Air.

The entire after part of the Iena was blown to pieces. The bodies of the victims were hurled through the air by a succession of explosions, and panic-stricken workmen at the arsenal fled for their lives from the vicinity of the dry dock. Scores of those on board the Iena jumped overboard onto the stone quays and sustained serious injuries.

The primary cause of the accident was the explosion of a torpedo.

Pride of Navy Destroyed.

What caused the explosion is not known, but the powder magazines of the Iena were set on fire and their contents in exploding practically destroyed what was considered one of the best vessels in the French navy.

The first shock was extremely violent and shook the vessel fore and aft. It was followed instantly by other shocks. The crew was thrown into a condition of panic.

The hundreds of men below deck were in a fearful position, and while they groped their way toward the exits they became the prey of suffocating fumes which caused many of them to fall unconscious.

Survivors Go Insane.

It will be impossible to ascertain the exact number of killed and wounded until a roll call can be held, as many of the men were completely blown to pieces, while others were incinerated.

Many of those who escaped with their lives suffered most severe injuries, and becoming temporarily insane rushed frantically around the vicinity of the dry dock until they fell exhausted.

LAND FRAUDS IN IDAHO.

Government Will Sift Them to Bottom and Punish the Guilty.

Lewiston, Idaho, March 14. — Hints from Boise as to startling land fraud disclosures at Lewiston tend to confirm reports from authentic sources that the government has for a year considered the land frauds in Idaho more gigantic than in either Oregon, Montana or Washington, and that it is the intention of the government to sift them to the bottom, bringing guilty ones to trial and then bringing reentrance proceedings after conviction to secure re-possession of the lands fraudulently secured from the United States.

Means Ruin for Many.

This latter step will mean great finnancial loss and perhaps absolute ruin to private individuals and banking institutions, which are or have been, it is asserted, directly or indirectly connected with the handling or ownership of lands said to have been fraudulently acquired. It is known that the few indictments secured at Moscow at the last two terms of court are but a beginning. There are, it is said, other indictments to follow, which are to bring into the pale of the law men high in all walks of life, and whose names so far have not been even suggested.

It is asserted that evidence has been secured which, when presented in court, will prove astounding to the general public.

JEROME LOSES EVERY POINT

CEASELESS BATTLE BETWEEN PROSECUTOR AND ATTORNEY DELMAS.

New York, March 13.—On the first day of the state's case in rebuttal at the trial of Harry Thaw, District Attorney Jerome yesterday came to a temporary standstill against the practically solid wall the rules of evidence have built around the story of Evelyn Nesbit Thaw. Mr. Jerome began to attack this story as soon as court opened. There ensued a well nigh ceaseless battle between the prosecutor and D. M. Delmas, the leading counsel for the defense, at the end of which Justice Fitzgerald upheld the rule laid down at the beginning of the trial—that Mrs. Thaw's story was admissible only as tending to show the effect it might have had in unbalancing the defendant's mind and its truth of falsity is not material.

Mr. Jerome tried to avoid this rule by declaring he was endeavoring merely to show by inference—by circumstantial evidence as to facts and details in the story—that Mrs. Thaw could not possibly have told the story to her husband. Although he will doubtless be blocked by the same rule when the time comes, it is said the district attorney may attempt in the same way to prove an alibi for Stanford White on the night he is alleged to have maltreated young Miss Nesbit.

Delmas Wins Every Point.

Nine-tenths of yesterday's sessions were spent in argument, and in nearly every instance when the smoke of conflict cleared away Mr. Delmas had won his point as to law, while Mr. Jerome in the very argument itself had got before the jury a perfect knowledge as to what his witnesses would have testified to had they been permitted. The district attorney called ten witnesses during the day, but aside from drawing the state's witnesses to the tragedy the opinion that Thaw seemed rational the night he shot and killed White, little real hearway was made.

THAW SANE NIGHT OF MURDER.

White's Brother-in-Law Tells of Talk With Thaw Before Tragedy.

New York, March 14. — The end of the Thaw trial at last seems to be in sight. Tentative plans for the final stages of the trial were agreed upon yesterday by opposing counsel. District Attorney Jerome has at last burned behind him all bridges leading to a lunacy commission and has irrevocably pointed his course to proving that Thaw was sane when he shot Stanford White, and that being sane his crime constituted murder in the first degree. Within ten days or two weeks the case should be in the jury's hands.

Played Strongest Card.

Mr. Jerome played yesterday probably the strongest card he holds—evidence which came to his knowledge but a few days ago and which undoubtedly caused him to abandon the idea of sending White's slayer to a madhouse and to try for a straightout conviction under the criminal statutes. The evidence came from Mrs. Stanford White's brother, James Clinch Smith, who told a remarkably clear, succinct story of the events of Madison Square Garden the night White was killed and of a long conversation he had with Thaw just prior to the shooting.

Thaw Talked Like Sane Man.

It seems that Thaw sat for some time with Smith during the fateful first performance of "Mam'selle Champagne" and discussed with him a variety of topics in a manner, Mr. Smith declared, such as any sane man would talk.

Attorney Delmas, for the defense, bitterly fought the introduction of this testimony for nearly two hours. He declared that Mr. Smith was properly a witness in chief and should not be allowed to testify in rebuttal. Mr. Jerome replied that he had known only for a few days the real value of Mr. Smith's testimony—the conversations with Thaw.

Hard Blow to Defense.

Justice Fitzgerald held that, in the interest of justice, the jury was entitled to all the facts. It was one of the most serious blows the judge has dealt the defense since the trial began.

NEW RATE RAISES FARE.

Wisconsin Cut Unpopular With Merchants.

La Crosse, Wis., March 14. — The new 2 1-2 cent passenger rate which just went into effect on Wisconsin railroads is raising a storm of protest from merchants of La Crosse, on the theory that while it will be a benefit to the merchants of Milwaukee and to travelers going the entire distance across the state, it works to the disadvantage of La Crosse merchants by increasing the railroad fare from nearby villages and towns.

Many instances have been found in the new tariffs published by the railroads in which the fare from towns within a radius of fifty or seventy-five miles of this city has been increased since the adoption of the 2 1-2 cent rate.

Tuesday the senate passed a resolution directing the committee to report on the house bill. The action yesterday leaves the situation as it was before the resolution of Tuesday was offered. It is the same as the so-called "wide-open" tax amendment and is introduced now simply as a precautionary measure in the event that the steel trust and other associate concerns which are behind the movement to recount the votes on the constitutional amendment are successful in the attempt to have the vote declared insufficient to carry the measure.

P. F. Owens has sold his farm to William Sheehy, the tract being one of the finest pieces of land in Le Sueur county. It contains 200 acres and the price was $10,500. Mr. Owens will probably locate in North Dakota.

Rudolph Halvorson was found dead in a pit at the East Seventh street car barns in St. Paul. His skull was fractured and crushed. No one connected with the barn could throw any light on how the young man met death.

Chester Clay fell thirty-two feet to the ground from a windmill which he was oiling on the Edward Jones' farm in Nashville. He was picked up unconscious. It is expected he will recover without serious results from the accident.

Houston county is in a state of excitement over the presence of a mad dog. Several cows were bitten and it is feared the diseased animal bit several other canines before he was killed by Clark Sennes, whose stock he infected.

Miss Anna Blase, thirty-two years old, was found dying in a room in the home of her parents at St. Paul. Three bullet wounds were found. It is thought that the wounds were self-inflicted during a fit of temporary insanity on account of a love affair.

Miss Tillie Fahmer and Edward Sorg of Faribault were married in Dundas. The bride's parents, thinking the young couple were about to elope, locked the girl in the house, and on their return found her gone. They immediately set a watch at each station, but the young man had hired a livery rig and driven to Dundas, where the ceremony was performed.

The wife and three-year-old child of Robert Swartout, a settler who lives at Scott Meadow, about twenty miles northeast of Aitkin, were terribly burned by the overturning of a lamp on the table. To smother the flames, which enveloped the child, the mother wrapped about them her own clothing, which ignited, and she is probably fatally injured. The child may recover.

Fred Allen, one of the best known operators on the Milwaukee road, has been arrested at Owatonna on a charge of embezzlement. A wide discrepancy between Allen's showing of cash turned in and the actual amount which was due the company for tickets sold at Owatonna is alleged to have been discovered. Allen disclaimed any criminal intent or responsibility for the apparent shortage of about $400.

The dwelling of Dan Johnson of Pleasant Grove village was burned up about 3 o'clock one morning recently. The loss was $1,500, with no insurance The family barely escaped with their lives. Mr. Johnson was badly burned about the face and hands and is in a critical condition.

A. Aughenbaugh, father of J. W. Aughenbaugh, a veteran miller of Waseca, is dead. Mr. Aughenbaugh was born in the year 1819 in Shelbyville, Iowa, and had lived in several states since then, but since 1856 had been a citizen of Minnesota. He is survived by four daughters and two sons.

VALUABLE FORMULA

WELL-KNOWN AUTHORITY CLAIMS IT IS MOST EFFECTIVE.

Says It Will Break Up a Cold in 24 Hours and Cure Any Cough That Is Curable—Inexpensive.

A noted authority on diseases of the throat and lungs, who established a camp for consumptives in the Pine Woods of Maine, and whose remarkable cures there have attracted great attention from the medical world, says that his entire treatment consisted of fresh air, nourishing food and the Pure Virgin Oil of the White Pine Trees mixed with Whisky and Glycerine, in the following proportions:

Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure)..½ oz.
Glycerine .... 2 "
Good Whisky .... 8 "

Used in teaspoonful doses every four hours.

It is claimed that the above mixture will heal and strengthen the lungs, break up a cold in twenty-four hours, and cure any cough that is curable.

The ingredients can be secured from any good prescription druggist at small cost and can be easily mixed in your own home.

Inquiry at the prescription department of a leading local pharmacy elicited the information that Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure) is put up only in half-ounce vials for dispensing. Each vial is securely sealed in a round wooden case with engraved wrapper with the name—Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure); guaranteed under the Food and Drug Act, June 30, 1906. Prepared only by Leach Chemical Co., Cincinnati, O.—plainly printed thereon. Only the cheaper Oils are sold in bulk, but these produce nausea, and never effect the desired results.

His Experience.

"Well," replied Henpeck, "if there's any joy in matrimony that must be it."

A Relative.

During our last election I listened to a colored man who was trying to swear in his vote. He had a friend aong as a witness.

"Is this man related to you?" asked the judge.

"In what way is he related to you?" continued the judge.

"His wife do ma washin', sah."

HIS DELAYED MESSAGE.

Tenant Had Taken the Matter Into His Own Hands.

The tenant faced the landlord with a determined look.

"The man you let into the vacant suite last week," he said, "plays the flute."

"Does he play much?"

"No; he only plays a little. He plays a great deal of the time, but he only plays a little."

"You mean that he's a poor player."

"I mean that he's a player with poor taste. Any flutist that gets up at 2 o'clock in the morning and tootles out scales and things isn't much on taste, to my way of thinking.'

"I'll have to have a talk with him," said the landlord.

"It's no use," sighed the tenant. "He won't listen to you."

"We'll soon find out about that," said the landlord, as he reached for his hat.

"It's no use, I tell you," responded the tenant. "Him and me had a fight last night an' I broke his flute an' he moved out this morning. That's what I came in to tell you." — Cleveland Plain Dealer.

THE WHOLE FAMILY.

Mother Finds a Food for Grown-Ups and Children as Well.

Food that can be eaten with relish and benefit by the children as well as the older members of the family, makes a pleasant household commodity.

Such a food is Grape-Nuts. It not only agrees with and builds up children, but older persons who, from bad habits of eating, have become dyspeptic.

A Phila. lady, after being benefited herself persuaded her husband to try Grape-Nuts for stomach trouble. She writes:

"About eight years ago I had a severe attack of congestion of stomach and bowels. From that time on, I had to be careful about eating, as nearly every kind of food then known to me, seemed to cause pain.

"Four years ago I commenced to use Grape-Nuts. I grew stronger and better, and from that time I seldom have been without it; have gained in health and strength and am now heavier than I ever was.

"My husband was also in a bad condition—his stomach became so weak that he could eat hardly anything with comfort. I got him to try Grape-nuts, and he soon found his stomach trouble had disappeared.

"My girl and boy, 3 and 9 years old, do not want anything else for breakfast but Grape-Nuts, and more healthy children cannot be found." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little booklet, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

PLENTY OF NITROGEN LEFT.

Supply From the Atmosphere Alone Practically Inexhaustible.

It has been estimated that in France alone the amount of nitrogen yearly taken from the soil is 600,000 tons, and not much more than one-half of this is returned to the soil in stable manure. Let it be assumed, for the purpose of argument, that these countries employing nitrogenous fertilizers use during each year 5,000,000 tons of nitrogen.

This seems to be a fairly liberal estimate judging from the above figure regarding France, and the fact that during 1905 1,500,000 tons of nitrate of soda were employed throughout the world. On this basis it is easily seen that there is no danger of impoverishing the atmosphere, for the atmospheric pressure at sea level corresponds to about eleven pounds of nitrogen a square inch, or say 1,500 pounds a square foot, or 2,0000,000 tons a square mile.

Each square mile of the earth's surface has above it enough nitrogen to supply the entire world for five years on the basis assumed above and since the entire surface of the earth is not much short of 200,000,000 square miles the world can go on abstracting nitrogen at this rate for about 1,000,000 years before reducing the quantity in the atmosphere one-tenth per cent.

A Rare Complaint.

"Isn't it strange," asks the man, "that so many men, after years of ruthless commercial practices, piracies, one might almost say, after they have climbed to the very pinnacle of success, should have softening of the brain?"

"I would be stranger yet, infinitely stranger," replies the man with the corrugated brow, "if any of them ever had softening of the heart."—Puck.

About $6,0,000,000 is a present invested in England in the manufacture of motor wagons. About 250,000 men are employed in them as chauffeurs, etc., and their wages aggregate $75,000,000 a year.

C. J. Broughton, Esq.,
Canadian Government Agent,
Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sir:

Being so well pleased with Canada we wish my father and brother to come here. Will you please send them reading matter on Canada.

We have been here nearly a year and are delighted with this country. We have lived in Illinois, Iowa, and Michigan and we find Canada away ahead of any of them. We have had bright sunshine all winter so far, only two nice, easy snow storms. If it was not all right you know I would not want my father and brother to come here, but we think it is grand.

Yours truly,

The Republican state central committee ought to agree with the St. Paul boomers that the state capitol needs a larger and more convenient approach.

Elmer Adams made a clever hit with the farmers. A million dollars' worth of anniversary bridgos looks a lot better to the agriculturalist than a million dollars' worth of state fair.

The wolf industry is a fine source of income for Roseau county just now. Last week the state auditor distributed $10,000 in wolf bounties and the little northern county got $2,900 of it.

The Ortonville Herald-Star remarks that "if the railroads fight the 2-cent passenger fare in every state in which the rate has been fixed by law they will need to charge 10 cents per mile to pay the costs."

Even Teddy Roosevelt would endanger his personal popularity by coming to Minnesota and arguing in favor of the ship subsidy. Knute Nelson could tell Teddy that the gophers are a little sensitive on this point.

The legislature is not developing any gubernational booms for the Republicans. The party, though, can fall back on Bob Dunn, Loren Collins or Billy Eustis. It is thought to be impossible to resusticate the late Mr. Cole.

The creamery is the greatest aid the business man has. Wherever there is a prosperous creamery you can always find prosperous farmers and prosperous merchants. The three go hand in hand—each needs the others to complete the trinity of good times.

The Hallock News thinks the Republican legislature is not making much party capital and sees a gloomy outlook for the next campaign. The trouble, Bro. Nelson, is that the Republican party has been getting further and further away f om the people and has lost the way back.

The real leaders of the Republican party in Minnesota don't run for office nor figure in the campaign management. Ed Smith and Johnnie Calhoun—smooth, suave, immaculate—wouldn't get satisfactory results on the forum, but they know how to kill legislation unfriendly to the corporations and put a "joker" in a good bill.

The Fairmont Sentinel sagely suggests that "it does not take much figuring to prove that $10,000 invested in new bridges in Martin county would prove of more value to the people than a dozen Twin City exhibitions termed state fairs. We hope Senator Hinton and Representative Schrooton will help the Adams bill whenever given the opportunity."

The Northfield News thinks the much vaunted Jerome is a good deal of a fakir. He is eager enough to bring out all the harrowing details of poor, frail and erring Evelyn Thaw, but the great corporation magnates who were partners of Stanford White in the social crimes of which he is charged are protected from exposure. Evelyn Thaw is probably guilty of much that has bees charged to her, but should not be compelled to bear the burden of the blame belonging to others.

Governor Johnson has invited several lieutenant governors in the Canadian provinces to either participate themselves, or to send delegates to the national conference of of charities and corrections., which will be held in June. The governor stated that this is the first in the history of the organization that the executives of a foreign government have been asked to attend the conference. He has not yet received any replies from the invitation, but expects that, in most cases, they will be accepted.

Here's a good story well told. The scene is laid in southern Minnesota on a passenger train. A farmer and a lawyer occupied the same seat. When the condnctor came the farmer presented his ticket, the lawyer a pasg. The farmer's features did not conceal his disgust when be discovered that his seat-mate was a deadbead. The lawyer, trying to assuage the indignation of the observing granger, said to him: "My friend, you travel very on this road." "I think so myself," replied the farmer "considering the fact that I have to pay fare for the both of us."

Governor Johnson's proposal to hold a conference of western governors, attorneys general and railroad commissionors to talk over the railroad legislation enacted or sugges-ed by the legislators seems to have met with hearty response. Out of this happy idea may grow a solution of the railroad ills and uniform legislation in the various states. It will also tend to make clearer the line between the federal and state powers. The plan is so prophetic of good results that no one doubts the wisdom of the governor's suggestion. A little more than a year ago Governor Johnson proposed the famous insurance conference, and out of that has grown the improved and uniform insurance laws under which nearly all of the states are now working. A man wise enough to offer two such splendid plans would make a notable president—and it is not improbable that Minneaota's governor will succeed Theodore Roosevelt on March 4, 1909.

"Preventics" will promptly check a cold or the grippe when taken early or at the "sneeze stage." Preventics cure seated colds as well. The damage will amount to sixty or seventy dollars.

WHEN FATHER HAS THE GRIP.

Poor mother wears a worried look,
And sister wears a frown;
And if I venture up the stairs,
They send me straightway down.
I m going to the drugstore now,
Upon a hurried trip,
To get some other kind of dope,
For father has the grip.

I heard him groaning in the night,
He said his head would split;
And then he thought his back would break;
In just a little bit.
He told us that his legs were sore,
And soon it was his hip;
It seems that everything was sick
When father has the grip.

The doctor came today and left
Some capsules, and he said
To take one each three hours until
The pain had really fled.
Says pa: "That means twelve hours before
I give this pain the slip;
I'll bet he'd find a faster dope
If he had got the grip."

And then he told ma that he thought
That he was going to die;
An' ma says no, that isn't so,
And gave the reason why.
Then pa got mad and told her that
He didn't want her lip;
Oh, there's no comfort in our flat
When father has the grip.

Winter has been "lingering in the lap of spring" longer than seems necessary to display a platonic affection. CHAPTER VIII.—[CONTINUED.]

Mr. Trevlyn had the diamonds, which were the wonder of the city, richly set, and Margarie was to wear them on her bridal night, as a special mark of the old man's favor. For, next to the diamonds, the sordid man loved Margie Harrison.

Linmere's gift to his bride was very simple, but in exquisite taste, Mrs. Weldon decided. A set of turquoise, with his initials and hers interwoven. Only when they were received, did Margie come out of her cold composure. She snapped together the lid of the casket containing them with something very like angry impatience, and gave the box to her maid.

"Take them away, Florine, instantly, and put them where I shall never see them again!"

The woman looked surprised, but she was a discreet piece, and strongly attached to her mistress, and she put the ornaments away without comment.

The tenth of October arrived. A wet, lowering day, with alternate snatches of rain and sunshine, settling down toward sunset into a steady, uncomfortable drizzle. A dismal enough wedding-day.

The ceremony was to take place at nine o'clock in the evening, and the invited guests were numerous. Harrison Park would accommodate them royally.

Mr. Linmere was expected out from the city in the six o'clock train, and as the stopping place was not more than five minutes' walk from the Park he had left orders that no carriage need be sent. He would walk up. He thought he should need the stimulus of the fresh air to carry him through the fiery ordeal, he said, laughingly.

The long day wore slowly away. The preparations were complete. Mrs. Weldon, in her violet moire-antique and family diamonds, went through the stately parlors once more to assure herself that everything was au fait.

At five o'clock the task of dressing the bride began. The bridesmaids were in ecstacies over the finery, and they took almost as much pains in dressing Margie as they would in dressing themselves for a like occasion.

Margie's cheeks were as white as the robes they put on her. One of the girls suggested rouge, but Alexandrine demurred.

"A bride should always be pale," she said. "It looks so interesting, and gives every one the idea that she realizes the responsibility she is taking upon herself—doesn't that veil fall sweetly?"

And then followed a shower of feminine expressions of admiration from the four charming bridesmaids.

"Is everything ready?" asked Margie, wearily, when at last they paused in their efforts.

"Yes, everything is as perfect as any one could desire," said Alexandrine. "How do you feel, Margie, dear?"

"Very well, thank you."

"You are so self-possessed. Now I should be all of a tremble! Dear me! I wonder people can be so cold on the eve of such a great change! But then we are so different. Will you not take a glass of wine, Margie?"

"Thank you, no. I do not take wine, you know."

"I know, but on this occasion. Hush! that was the whistle of the train. Mr. Linmere will be here in a few minutes! Shall I bring him up to see you?. It is not etiquette for the groom to see the bride on the day of their marriage, until they meet at the altar; but, you look so charming, dear! I would like him to admire you. He has such exquisite taste."

Margie's uplifted eyes had a half-frightened look, which Alexandrine did not understand.

"No, no!" she said, hurriedly, "do not bring him here! We will follow etiquette for this time, if you please, Miss Lee."

"O well, just as you please, my dear."

"And now, my friends, be kind enough to leave me alone," said Margie. "I want the last hours of my free life to myself. I will ring when I desire your attendance."

Margie's manner forbade any objection on the part of the attendants, and they somewhat reluctantly withdrew. She turned the key upon them, and went to the window. The rain had ceased falling, but the air was damp and dense.

Her room was on the first floor, and the windows, furnished with balconies, opened to the floor. She stood looking out into the night for a moment, then gathered up her flowing drapery, and covering herself with a heavy cloak, stepped from the window. The damp earth struck a chill to her delicately shod feet, but she did not notice it. The mist and fog dampened her hair, unheeded. She went swiftly down the shaded path, the dead leaves of the linden trees rustling mournfully as she swept through them. Past the garden and its deserted summer-house, and the grapery, where the purple fruit was lavishing its sweets on the air, and climbing a stile, she stood beside a group of shading cypress trees. Just before her was a square enclosure, fenced by a hedge of arbor vitae, from the midst of which, towering white and spectral up into the silent night, rose a marble shaft, surmounted by the figure of an angel, with drooping head and folded wings.

Margie passed within the enclosure, and stood beside the grave of her parents. She stood a moment silent, motionless; then, forgetful of her bridal garment, she flung herself down on the turf.

"Oh, my father! my father!" she cried, "why did you doom me to such a fate? Why did you ask me to give that fatal promise? Oh, look down from heaven and pity your child!"

The wind sighed mournfully in the cypresses, the belated crickets and katydids droned in the hedge, but no sweet voice of sympathy soothed Margie's strained ear. For, wrought up as she was, she almost listened to hear some response from the lips which death had made mute forever.

The village clock struck half-past eight, warning Margie that it was almost time for the ceremony to take place. She started up, drew her cloak around her, and turned to leave the place. As she did so, she felt a touch on her hand—the hand she laid for a moment on the gate—as she stood giving a last sad look at the mound of earth she was leaving; a touch light and soft as a breath, but which thrilled her through every nerve.

She turned her head quickly, but saw nothing. Something like the sound of receding footsteps met her ear, nothing more, but she was convinced that there had been a human presence near her. Where? Her heart beat strangely; her blood, a moment before so chilled and stagnant, leaped through her veins like fire. From whence arose the change?

She reached her chamber without meeting any one, and unlocking the door, rang for her attendants. The house was in a strange confusion. Groups were gathered in the corridors, whispering together, and some unexplained trouble seemed to have fallen upon the whole place.

After a little while, Alexandrine came in, pale and haggard. Margie saw that her white dress was damp, and her hair uncurled, as if by the weather.

"Where have you been, Alexandrine?" she asked; "and what is the matter?"

The girl turned from white to crimson.

"I have been in my room," she replied.

"But your clothes are damp, and your hair uncurled."

"The air is wet, and this great house is as moist as an ice-shed," returned the girl, hurriedly. "It is no wonder if my hair is uncurled. Margie, the—the —Mr. Linmere has not arrived."

"Not arrived! It must be nine o'clock."

As she spoke, the sonorous strokes of the clock proclaiming the hour, vibrated through the house.

"We have been distracted about him for more than two hours! he should surely have been here by half-past six! Mr. Trevlyn has sent messengers to the depot, to make inquiries, and the officekeeper thinks Mr. Linmere arrived in the six o'clock train, but is not quite positive. Mr. Weldon went, himself, to meet the seven-thirty train, thinking perhaps he might have got detained, and would come on in the succeeding train, but he did not arrive. And there are no more trains to-night! Oh, Margie, isn't it dreadful?"

CHAPTER IX.

ALEXANDRINE'S manner was greatly flurried and ill at ease, and the hand she laid on Margie's was cold as ice. Margie scrutinized her curiously, wondering the while at her own heartless apathy.

Something had occurred to stir the composure of this usually cool, self-possessed woman fearfully. But what it was Margie could not guess.

Mr. Trevlyn burst into the room, pale and exhausted.

"It is no use!" he said, throwing himself into a chair, "no use to try to disguise the truth! There will be no wedding tonight, Margie! The bridegroom has failed to come! The scoundrel! If I were ten years younger, I would call him out for this insult!"

Margie laid her hand on his arm, a strange, new feeling of vague relief pervading her. it was as if some great weight, under which her slender strength had wearied and sank, were rolled off from her.

"Compose yourself, dear guardian, he may have been unavoidably detained. Some business—"

"Business on his wedding day! No, Margie! there is something wrong somewhere. He is either playing us false—confound him!—or he has met with some accident! By George! who knows but he has been waylaid and murdered! The road from here to the depot, though short, is a lonely one, with woods on either side! And Mr. Linmere carries always about his person enough valuables to tempt a desperate character."

"I beg you not to suppose such a dreadful thing!" exclaimed Margie, shuddering; "he will come in the morning, and—"

"But Hayes was positive that he saw him leave the 6 o'clock train. He described him accurately, even saying that he had a bouquet of white camelias in his hand. Margie, what flowers was he to bring?"

She shook her head.

"Mrs. Weldon knows. I do not." Alexandrine spoke.

"White camelias. I heard Mrs. Weldon ask him to fetch them."

Mr. Trevlyn started up.

"I will have out the whole household, at once, and search the whole estate! For I feel as if some terrible crime may have been done upon our very threshold. Margie, dear, take heart, he may be alive and well!"

He went out to alarm the already excited guests, and in half an hour the place was alive with lanterns, carried by those who sought for the missing bridegroom.

Pale and silent, the women gathered themselves together in the chamber of the bride, and waited. Margie sat among them in her white robes, mute and motionless as a statue.

"It must be terrible to fall by the hand of an assassin!" said Mrs. Weldon, with a shudder. "Good heavens! what a dreadful thing it would be if Mr. Linmere has been murdered!"

"An assassin! My God!" cried Margie, a terrible thought stealing across her mind. Who had touched her in the cypress grove? What hand had woke in her a thrill that changed her from ice to fire? What if it were the hand of her betrothed husband's murderer?

Alexandrine started forward at Margie's exclamation. Her cheek was white as marble, her breath came quick and struggling.

"Margie! Margie Harrison!" she cried, "what do you mean?"

"Nothing," answered Margie, recovering herself, and relapsing into her usual self-composure.

They searched all that night, and found nothing. Absolutely nothing. With the early train, both Mr. Trevlyn and Mr. Weldon went to the city. They hurried to Mr. Linmere's room, only to have their worst fears confirmed. Pietro informed them that his master had left there on the 6 o'clock train; he had seen him to the depot, and into the car, receiving some orders from him relative to his rooms, after he had taken his seat.

There could be no longer any doubt but that there had been foul play somewhere. The proper authorities were notified, and the search began afresh. Harrison Park and its environs were thoroughly ransacked; the river was searched, the pond at the foot of the garden drained, but nothing was discovered. There was no clue by which the fate of the missing man could be guessed at, ever so vaguely.

Every person about the place was examined and cross-examined, but no one knew anything, and the night shut down, and left the matter in mystery. Pietro, at length, suggested Leo, Mr. Linmere's grayhound.

"Him no love his master," said the Italian, "but him scent keen. It will do no hurt to try him."

Accordingly the next morning Pietro brought the dog up to the Park. The animal was sullen, and would accept attentions from no one save Margie, to whom he seemed to take at first sight. And after she had spoken to him kindly, and patted his head, he refused all persuasions and commands to leave her.

Mr. Darby, the detective, whose services had been engaged in the affair, exerted all his powers of entreaty on the dog, but the animal clung to Margie, and would not even look in the direction of the almost frantic detective.

"It's no use, Miss Harrison," said Darby, "the cur won't stir an inch. You will have to come with him! Sorry to ask ye, but this thing must be seen into."

"Very well, I will accompany you," said Margie, rising, and throwing on a shawl, she went out with them, followed by Mrs. Weldon, Alexandrine, and two or three other ladies.

Leo kept close to Margie, trotting along beside her, uttering every now and then a low whine indicative of anticipation and pleasure.

LICENSE TO STEAL.

Success of a Young Lawyer in Proving His Client a Kleptomaniac.

"My first case," said a well-known attorney to a San Francisco Call reporter, "was the defense of a negro preacher for stealing wood from a railroad company. A great deal of fuel had been lost from time to time, so when the culprit was arrested the company was so anxious to make an example of him that it employed special counsel and prosecuted the case vigorously. The evidence against the old man was convincing. He had been sneaking around the woodpile and was arrested while carrying off a load.

"I had subpoenaed about twenty well-known men to testify to the previous good character of the defendant. When the prosecution case was closed I put one on the stand and asked:

"'Do you know the defendant's reputation for honesty and integrity?'

"'Yes,' was the answer.

"'What is it, good or bad?'

"'Bad. He will steal anything he can get his hands on.'

"A titter ran through the court-room. It wasn't the answer I had expected, but it was too late, so I put on a bold front and called another. He testified as the other witness had, and the prosecuting attorney rubbed his hands with satisfaction. Before I got through with my witnesses I proved that my client was a notorious thief, who had never been known to neglect an opportunity to steal something, no matter how trifling it might be. Then I called a couple of physicians, proved the existence of a mental disorder known as kleptomania, read some authorities to show that it was a good defense if proved, and submitted my case. The old preacher was acquitted and thereafter stole with impunity, for he considered his acquittal in the face of the facts equivalent to a license to steal."

A dead level is a hard climb to a good many people.

"HAIL THE CHIEF!"

SALUTE OF FIREBOAT CREW TO DIGNIFIED NOBODY.

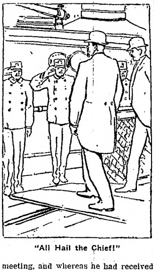
Rather Mean Trick Played on Man Over Impressed with His Own Importance—Took Ceremony as His Just Due.

A former chief engineer of the volunteer fire department in the little town of Hinsdale, N. H., who is well known throughout New England for his great dignity, gruff manners and small stature, took a pleasure trip to New York some time since with a friend who was not lacking in a sense of humor. They decided to inspect the fireboats in the harbor, those powerful engines which can throw an avalanche of water, compared to which the old hand-tub, the engine of the Hinsdale department, could throw but a drop to a bucket.

The chief's friend managed to slip a word to one of the officers about the chief's appreciation of himself and his position. When, therefore, the visiting party boarded the fire-tug they found the crew lined up in double row. An officer inquired about the personality of their leader, and back came the reply: "Chief of the Hinsdale fire department." Instantly every hand came to the salute, and as one voice the crew repeated: "All hail the chief!"

With perfect gravity the chief boarded the boat, taking the ceremony as his just due while behind him his companions' faces were wreathed in smiles, and as he passed along the line the crew might be seen doubling up as though taken with cramps.

This same chief will be remembered for an incident which occurred a few years later. His unpopularity came to a climax at the spring town meeting, and whereas he had received his office of chief engineer year after year by acclamation, and had indeed served the town well, this year there were votes printed and it was decided to vote by ballot.



"All Hail the Chief!"

Teh town clerk was elected by a motion from the floor instructing the moderator to cast one ballot for the chosen candidate. Then followed balloting for chief engineer, which resulted in a new man having 177 to the former chief's 1.

Following this a wag stepped up to the ex-chief and said: "How's this, chief; here the town clerk has one vote and is elected, while you have one vote and are not elected?"

But for the timely interference of friends a lively fight would have ensued.

Human Penholders.

A man who lives in Manhattan has hit upon an unusual scheme whereby he always carries his writing pen with him. He has been letting the nail of his forefinger grow for more than a year, until now it is nearly an inch long and it is cut and shaped like the nib of a goose quill pen. Whenever he wishes to use pen and ink he dips his finger into the ink and scribbles along at a very rapid rate.

Writing in this way was not as easy as it looked. With no long holder to give the hand balance and with an entirely different position of the hand and fingers to master, this human penholder found that it required some practice and skill to do as well with his novel instrument as with the ordinary one.

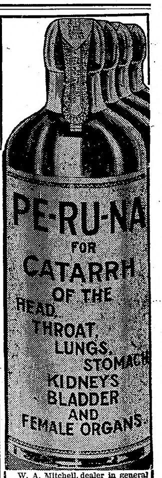
Water From Pennsylvania Mines.

Over 500,000,000 gallons of water are pumped out of the anthracite coal mines of Pennsylvania every day in the year. The exact average for 1905 was 633,000,000 gallons a day. Nearly 1,000 powerful engines, delivering from mine bottom to surface 500,000 gallons of water a minute, are required. Mines may be shut down and coal production suspended, but the water flows on forever. According to the Iron Age, the cost of removing it is one of the important items of expense that make up the price of anthracite.

Soldier's Gold Watch.

A soldier of the First regiment of artillery named Jules Corneloup was, says the Paris Figaro, leaving the station of the Metropolitan at the Avenue de Suffren when a passer-by said: "Look out, you're going to lose your watch."

He looked down and found a magnificent gold watch hanging by a chain to a button of his dolman. It had evidently been caught in the crowd and remained hanging to the button.



W. A. Mitchell, dealer in general merchandise, Martin, Ga., writes:

"My wife lost in weight from 130 to 68 pounds. We saw she could not live long. She was a skeleton, so we consulted an old physician. He told her to try Peruna.

"She gradually commenced improving and getting a little strength. She now weighs 106 pounds. She is gaining every day, and does her own housework and cooking."

Tone Up With Good Paint

It is good business to keep property "toned up."

A coat of Pure White Lead Paint not only makes things look better and gives them a higher selling value, but it makes things wear better and gives them a higher value for long wear.

Pure White Lead gives an opaque, durable coat that protects and preserves from the ravages of time and weather.

Prospective buyers of Pure White Lead have heretofore been subject to much attempted fraud in adulteration and substitution. You are now protected by the Dutch Boy trade mark which is found on the side of kegs containing only Pure White Lead, made by the Old Dutch Process.

Reaction.

With a heavy sigh the candidate threw himself on the lounge in the family sitting room.

"Maria," he said, "the election is going against me. I am sure to be defeated."

"Then," spoke his wife, in a cold metallic voice, "I don't get the fine new bonnet you were going to buy for me when you were elected!"

"By George!" he exclaimed brightening up. "I hadn't thought of that!"

GENERAL BREAKDOWN

A Condition Which Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, the Great Blood Tonic, Have Been Curing for Years.

There is no more perplexing trouble for a physician to treat than debility cases, especially in women, in which there is no acute disease but in which the patient every day sinks lower and lower despite changes of medicine and similar experiments.

That Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will restore health under these conditions is no speculation but the fact has been proved in hundreds of cases similar to that of Mrs. Sarah Ramsey, of 1008 St. John St., Litchfield, Ill. She says "I never felt well after my first child was born. I had a gnawing pain in my stomach and could not hold any food down. My head ached a great deal and sometimes the pain went all through my body. I had dizzy spells so that I could not stand and seemed to be half blinded with pain. These spells would often last for over an hour. My blood seemed to be in a very poor condition and my hands and feet were like ice. I seemed to be growing weaker and weaker and could not get around to do my work in the house. I was extremely nervous and the least excitement would bring on a dizzy spell.

"For a number of years I was under a doctor's care but seemed to get no better. I had heard about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and I began to take them. I soon felt better and gained in weight and strength. My nerves are strong now and I am a well woman in every way."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists or will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y. A booklet of valuable information, entitled "Plain Talks to Women," sent free on request.

MAKES GOLD "STRIKE."

Ore Found by Homesteader Runs $105 to the Ton, Assayer Says.

Joseph Gauthier, a well known citizen of West Duluth, believes that he has made a rich strike of gold upon his homestead on the Duluth & Iron Range railroad. Samples of the ore are said to have assayed $105 in gold and silver to the ton.

Gauthier located the homestead, which is about twenty miles northeast of Skibo, several years ago, and since has been prospecting for ore. Considerable float ore has been found, but not in sufficient quantities to warrant mining. During this winter, Gauthier and several companions have made a careful examination of the claim and have succeeded in locating what they believed is a valuable gold vein. Gauthier returned here recently with a number of samples of the ore, which he submitted to an assayer at Duluth. Yesterday the assayer reported that the samples would run $105 to the ton, mostly in gold, although there was some silver in the ore. The assayer said that such a rich find is extremely unusual in this part of Northern Minnesota, although ore of equal richness has been discovered in the Rainy Lake region.

A further investigation of the vein from which the ore was taken will be made at once, and if it is found to be as extensive as Gauthier and his companions believe that it is, a company will be formed and the ore vein will be worked.

FISH WARMING UP.

State Game Commission Reminds Anglers of Closed Season.

The state game and fish commission has issued a bulletin calling attention to the closed season, March and April, for Minnesota fish. Bass are protected from March 1 to May 29; pike, muskalonge, crappies, perch, sunfish, sturgeon, catfish and any other variety except pickerel, suckers, redhorse, carp and bullheads from March 1 to May 1, and all trout, except lake trout, from Sept. 1 to April 15.

Spearing of pickerel and other rough fish is permitted at all times, and a fish house license is good until April 1, providing fish thus taken are not placed on the market and no hook and line fishing is done after March 1. All fish except trout and bass may be sold during the open season, but no game fish may be sold during March and April.

EPIDEMIC TIES UP TOWN.

Business at a Standstill and Schools Are Closed.

The town of Brunno, near Sandstone, is suffering from a severe epidemic of scarlet fever, which practically has brought business to a standstill. The schools were closed last Thursday, and a number of people have left town in order to escape from the disease. It is said that the epidemic was caused by the neglect or refusal of some of the people who were first attacked to abide by the quarantine regulations. Three deaths have occurred. The board of health now has taken the matter in hand and a strict quarantine has been established which it is believed will be effective in checking the epidemic.

NEW CHURCH IS DEDICATED.

First Baptist Members of Brainerd Hold Services.

The new First Baptist church of Brainerd was dedicated recently. Dr. A. T. Fowler preached the sermon, and he was assisted in the services by Rev. E. R. Pope of Minneapolis, Rev. P. G. Nelson, pastor of the Swedish Baptist church, Brainerd, and Rev. A. P. Garrett, pastor of the new church. The edifice is of brick and will seat about 400 persons. Its cost was about $6,000. The meetings were continued throughout the entire day. Dr. Fowler addressed the Sunday school immediately after the morning service, speaking to the young people in the afternoon. In the evening the Rev. E. R. Pope preached.

Beekeepers Meet.

The annual convention of the Southern Minnesota and Western Wisconsin Beekeepers' association was held in Winona, with the largest attendance in its history. In his annual address President W. K. Bates spoke appreciatively of the work done by William Russell of Minnehaha Falls as state bee inspector, in fighting the foul brood, but said more stringent legislation was needed to wipe this bee scourge out of Minnesota, and he hoped this legiature would pass such measures. He said the increased price of honey was justified by the increased price of beekeepers' supplies and the shortage in the yield on account of wet weather

WOULD GIVE UP CANNING.

Lake Crystal People Want to Stop Factory Work.

Mountain Lake has formed a stock company for the purpose of putting up a canning factory. Other Southern Minnesota towns have done the same, among which is Lake Crystal, where work on the factory is under way. There the stockholders, numbering 150 to 200 farmers and townspeople, have become dissatisfied with the project and have retained counsel to try to get the contract for the plant rescinded. Notice was served on the builders to stop work. The stockholders claim that the parties who sold them the factory machinery represented that the profit would be 60 per cent a year, whereas investigation has shown them that similar factories are losing investments and can be purchased for a fraction of the money invested. They also claim that the machinery being furnished is cheap. The company's capital stock is $13,800.

The College Widow.

George Ade's comedy, "The College Widow," which appears in St. Paul for four nights commencing Easter Sunday, March 31, and in Minneapolis for three nights and Saturday matinee, April 4 to 7, enjoys a unique distinction among the present day stage successes. It was not built to appeal in particular to faddists or class, but to the average man or woman, in whom, though sometimes slumbering, there exists an inherent love of honest sport. Hard play is just as much a part of the busy Americans' creed as is hard work, and in the fact that every figure in Mr. Ade's comedy concentrates himself heart and soul upon the interests of a football team, lies one of the chief fascinations of this wonderfully successful performance. An auditor of "The College Widow" is just as certain to become a partisan of one or the other of the mimic football teams in the play as are the people of Ade's imagination.

Following the Ferris Wheel.

Like the old Ferris whel of the Columbian exposition days, the great wheel of Earl's court, London, will never revolve again. It is being taken down and the steel in it sent to Wales, where, mixed with pig iron and iron ore, it will be converted into steel bars for tin plate making. Biscuit, tobacco and mustard cans will be manufactured from these. The steel of the British warship Montagu will undergo the same fate.

Honors Easy.

"What's the matter?" demanded the customer as the tobacconist examined his nickel; "that coin's all right."

"Oh! it'll pass, I guess," replied the tobacconist; "but it isn't as good as it might be."

"Well, neither is this cigar."

"Tell me about it."

"Well, when he began he was on his knees."

"And how did it end?"

"In the end—er—I was on them."

STOP WOMAN AND CONSIDER

First, that almost every operation in our hospitals, performed upon women, becomes necessary because of neglect of such symptoms as Backache, Irregularities, Displacements, Pain in the Side, Dragging Sensations, Dizziness and Sleeplessness.

Second, that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, has cured more cases of female ills than any other one medicine known. It regulates, strengthens and restores women's health and is invaluable in preparing women for child-birth and during the period of Change of Life.

Third, the great volume of unsolicited and grateful testimonials on file at the Pinkham Laboratory at Lynn, Mass., many of which are from time to time being published by special permission, give absolute evidence of the value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Mrs. Pinkham's advice.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

For more than 30 years has been curing Female Complaints, such as Dragging Sensations, Weak Back, Falling and Displacements, Inflammation and Ulceration, and Organic Diseases, and it dissolves and expels Tumors at an early stage.

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation to Women

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to write Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass. for advice. She is the Mrs. Pinkham who has been advising sick women free of charge for more than twenty years, and before that she assisted her mother-in-law, Lydia E. Pinkham in advising. Thus she is especially well qualified to guide sick women back to health. Write today, don't wait until too late.

SKIN DISEASES

HUMORS IN THE BLOOD

When the blood is pure, fresh and healthy, the skin will be soft, smooth and free from blemishes, but when some acid humor takes root in the circulation its presence is manifested by a skin eruption or disease. These humors get into the blood, generally because of an inactive or sluggish condition of the members of the body whose duty it is to collect and carry off the waste and refuse matter of the system. This unhealthy matter is left to sour and ferment and soon the circulation becomes charged with the acid poison. The blood begins to throw off the humors and acids through the pores and glands of the skin, producing Eczema, Acne, Tetter, Psoriasis, Salt Rheum and skin eruptions of various kinds. Eczema appears, usually with a slight redness of the skin followed by pustules from which there flows a sticky fluid that dries and forms a crust, and the itching is intense. It is generally on the back, breast, face, arms and legs, though other parts of the body may be affected. In Tetter the skin dries, cracks and bleeds; the acid in the blood dries up the natural oils of the skin, which are intended to keep it soft and pliant, causing a dry, feverish condition and giving it a hard, leathery appearance. Acne makes its appearance on the face in the form of pimples and black heads, while Psoriasis comes in scaly patches on different parts of the body. One of the worst forms of skin trouble, is Salt Rheum; its favorite point of attack is the scalp, sometimes causing baldness. Poison Oak and Ivy are also disagreeable types of skin disease. The humor producing the trouble lies dormant in the blood through the Winter to break out and torment the sufferer with the return of Spring. The best treatment for all skin diseases is S. S. S. It neutralizes the acids and removes the humors so that the skin instead of being irritated and diseased, is nourished by a supply of fresh, healthy blood. External applications of salves, washes, lotions, etc., while they soothe the itching caused by skin affections, can never cure the trouble because they do not reach the blood. S. S. S. goes down into the circulation and forces out every particle of foreign matter and restores the blood to its normal, pure condition, thereby permanently curing every form of skin affection. Book on Skin Diseases and any medical advice desired sent free to all who write. S. S. S. is for sale at all first class drug stores.

I suffered with Eczema for forty years and could find nothing to cure me until I tried S. S. S. I suffered intensely with the itching and burning; pustules would form from which there flowed a sticky fluid; crusts would come on the skin and when scratched off the skin was left as raw as a piece of beef. I suffered agony in the long years I was afflicted, but when I used S. S. S. I found a perfect cure. There has never been any return of the trouble.

DO YOU KNOW

That anarchy is the ghost of liberty.

That innocence seldom needs argument.

That a strong breath reveals a week backbone.

That it is easy to mistake a resolution for a reform.

That secrets behind the hand often but stabs in the back.

That no man ever found his father by shutting out his fellows.

That the sharp dealing that hurts is that which cuts into the soul.

That good wishes often grow up before they come again.

The sermon is sure to be empty of blessing when the head is full of business.

That people who are short on sense are apt to think themselves long on science.

That you are not likely to do much in this world until you learn to do without much.

That the effect of true consecration always is to cut cleaner the lines of square dealing.

That popular appreciation of your work will not be created by the depreciation of that of others.

That the man who tries to scatter happiness need not worry about his stores of holiness.

That it is not the upward gaze of ambition that makes men dizzy; it is the looking down on those who cannot climb.

That it always is the man who looks as though his religion disagreed with him who insists on others taking his dose.

That some people sit up nights wondering whether the Lord knows enough to tell their pearls from other people's pumpkins.

That appearances are seldom as disappearances.

That rattling tongues are usually to be found in empty heads.

That even the living skeleton has a thin chance of getting stout.

That many a man's popularity is due to his lack of self respect.

That she is a wise girl who knows enough not to pretend to know too much.

That a man saves his religion and his best suit of clothes for Sunday.

That it is easier to look over another's faults than to overlook them.

That if you wait for others to do things for you they are apt to do you while you wait.

That it takes a lot of common sense to get a man out of trouble a lot of nonsense got him into.

That if a man lets his judgement direct him he is accused of being a quitter. If he bucks it he's a fool.

That people sometimes stir up a lot of trouble by telling the truth when it would be policy to say nothing.

That the average doctor would die of starvation if his patients had no more confidence in him than he has in himself.

That the wife of a man who plays the races never has to waste any time figuring on what she will do with the money he wins.

That the girls of a country town never forgive a young man of their set if he disgraces himself by marrying an out-of-town girl.

That a lot of people who abuse the czar would be one if they could.

That every man is almost as pronounced in his antipathy for his own kin as he is for his wife's.

That the boy who plays truant from school never has as much fun as he anticipated.

That here is what the most of us do: Pay attention to the wishes of people when the wishes do not conflict with ours.

That when a man is ruled by a woman people say he is "weak." He is not weak; he is scared.

That if you run against the bedpost in the dark and get a black eye it looks as bad as the black eye received in a fight.

That the man in the thick of the fight, doing his best thoroughly hates the fat critic who is seated in a comfortable rocking chair at home.

That there have been a lot of different ones, but you probably have not seen a picture of Little Evelyn washing the supper dishes or doing anything sensible.

That it is a rare woman who can have a headache from eating cake at an afternoon party without giving the impression that she acquired it in slaving for her husband.

Weak Women

To weak and ailing women, there is at least one way to help. But with that way, two treatments must be combined. One is local, one is constitutional, but both are important, both essential.

Dr. Shoop's Night Cure is the Local.

Dr. Shoop's Restorative, the Constitutional.

The former—Dr. Shoop's Night Cure—is a topical mucous membrane suppository remedy, while Dr. Shoop's Restorative is wholly an internal treatment. The Restorative reaches throughout the entire system, seeking the repair of all nerve, all tissue, and all blood ailments.

The "Night Cure", as its name implies, does its work while you sleep. It soothes sore and inflamed mucous surfaces, heals local weaknesses and discharges, while the Restorative, eases nervous excitement, gives renewed vigor and ambition, builds up wasted tissues, bringing about renewed strength, vigor, and energy. Take Dr. Shoop's Restorative—Tablets or Liquid—as a general tonic to the system. For positive local help, use as well

DISTRICT COURT MILL GRINDING OUT WORK

March Term Of District Court For Red Lake County In Session Here This Week.

Several Cases Tried And Others Settled—Term Will Likely Continue All of Next Week.

The March term of the District Court for Red Lake county was convened at the court house in this city Monday, with the Hon. William Watts on the bench.

Nothing much was done in the morning, but in the afternnon the court got down to business in earnest, and since that time very satisfactory progress has been made, it being thought that the jury cases will be wound up by Saturday night, with the exception of the criminal counts.

The following is a brief resume of the cases tried, settled and disposed of this far:

O. A. Aubol vs. St. Hilaire Lumber company; damage case arising from the erection of a dam in the Red Lake river by defendants, abutting plaintiff's land in Rocksbury. The case finished last evening and went to the jury after supper.

Felix Fournet vs. Eli Lasha: suit on notes; judgment for plaintiff in amount claimed; defendant's answer withdrawn.

First National Bank of Crookston vs. Russel E. Vance and Merchants State Bank of Red Lake Falls; settled out of court.

Stone-Ordean Wells company vs. J. F. Mathews: settled; judgment for plaintiff.

Great Northern Railway company vs. Wylie Farmers' Elevator company; dismissed.

John Florin vs. J. K. Johnson, Theo. LaBissoniere, H. J. Kaufer, John Deutschman and M. Skala; suit against bondsmen of Contractor Johnson for material furnished him in the construction of the Washington school building in this city. This case has been noticed for trial this term, but it is evpected that it will go over and be tried later in chambers.

Case of John Haley and Eliza Haley vs. the Great Northern Railroad company; this was a personal injury suit for a large amount, and promised to develop some interesting testimony. The plaintiff's alleged that as a result of a shock sustained in a wreck on the defendant's railroad, Eliza Haley gave premature birth to a child, thereby impairing her health, and restitution was demanded. The company sent a detective to Thief River Falls and as a result of his investigation a large number of prominent Thief River business men and others were subpoenaed to appear as witnesses, and it was hinted that had the case came to trial some decidedly interesting developments would have been forthcoming. The jury was empaneled but before the trial started the company's attorney made a final offer of settlement, which was accepted, and the deal was off. The plaintiff's were given $1500 in settlement of the three cases on the calendar and withdrew the complaints.

The case of Joseph Brohman vs. George Singer, an appeal from the justice court, is on today and will likely be finished tonight.

It is probable that with the criminal matters and few remaining civil cases court will be in session nearly all of next week.

FARM HOME BURNS,

The farm residence of Paul Cyr, west of the city was completely destroyed by fire Tuesday night, the building and all the contents being entirely consumed. The origin of the fire is not known, but it had gained such headway when discovered that nothing much could be saved. Mr. Cyr estimates his loss at $1500, with $400 insurance.

COUNTRY JAKES STAND PAT

Million Dollar Semi-Centennial Graft Is Defeated In The Senate Today.

ST. PAUL, MINN, March 28 9:44 a. m. (Special to the Courier)—Senate defeated by one vote the bill appropriating one million dollars for semi-centennial exposition.

The news above conveyed will de pleasing to the people of the state—outside the cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis. The "semi-centennial" scheme was only a graft from the start, and that the country members should stand pat and defeat the bill is a source of gratification to all.

ARBOR DAY PROCLAMATION

Govenor Johnson Proclaims April 26 the Day for Planting Trees In Minnesota.

Spring poetry stirred the blood of Governor John A. Jonnson Friday when he dictated his annual Arbor day proclamation. The governor grew sentimental when he thought that for one day Minnesota people will plant trees instead of destroying them. Here is what he said:

"When, following the law and custom of our state, I hereby proclaim Friday April 26, as Arbor and Bird day for 1907, private pleasure collaborates with official duty.

"The place and purpose of the tree in history, its dignity and worth, are they not set forth in the chronicles of christendom that all the world may read, from it's first mention in the first chapter of the first book on to that last Revealation of the world unseen, where, 'In the midst of the street of it * * * was there the tree of life, * * * and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations?'

Throughout all time man has been the tree's sincere worshipper. In his boyhood he sought its green heights; in his youth he walked beneath its whispering branches; in his age he sat content in its sympathetic shade; 'after life's fitful fever, he sleeps well'—at the foot of it. The influence of this lifelong companionship is deep, lasting and visible.

"Quite apart from the indirect force in the mass as a factor of climate, we have daily testimony of its power to mold in the character of the Norseman, austern, independent, strong as his native pine; the Briton, rugged, honest, outspreading as his much-sung oak; the German, true forester and forest-lover that he is, full of sentiment as his linden, musical as his fir, sturdy as his beeches. Out of a state peopled by such races, what may we not hope for? Surely, the rights of the forest will be reverenced; surely the forest will make royal return.

"Let the day of this proclamation be observed far and wide among us, in deed and in spirit, in school, home and mart. Let the highways be embellished; make crooked paths straight, rough places smooth. Let consecration of aim unite with concentration of effort toward making of Minnesota one vast landscape garden, where the workings of nature are cunningly aided, not held in thrall; by man; where song sparrow may sing in the hedgerows, while meadow lark and bobolink trill their sweetness from the topmost boughs, 'and none shall make them afraid.'"

GRAND JURY MAKES REPORT

August Body Completes Two Days' Session and is Discharged Last Evening.

The grand jury returned the report of its findings to the court last evening, after having been in session two days, and were discharged with the thanks of the court for their faithful service.

On convening Tuesday morning, Russel E. Vance was chosen foreman, and the work before them was taken up. A large number of witnesses were examined on different matters, and while nothing is given out as to what they did, it is hinted that seven indictments were returned. Nothing is known as to their nature, other than that two of them are against the Soo brakeman now held in the county jail here.

They will probably be public property in a very short time, however, as soon as those who counts have been issued against are brought before the court

HORSES TO MONTANA.

Louis Seiff shipped thirty seven head of horses to Billings, Montana, Saturday, and expects to ship another big bunch the latter part of the week. Several men accompanied the first shipment and will spend the summer at railroad work out there. When the next shipment goes, Mr. Seiff and over a dozen others will go along. Seiff's horses will be put to work on a new railroad to be built out there this summer.

It frequently happens, especially in persons who are troubled with constipation, that small particles and seeds enter the appendix. These soon start to ferment and decay and then we have the dreaded disease, appendicitis. How much nicer it is to have a bottle of Dr. Adler's Treatment in the home and take a dose once or twice a week. Then you are perfectly safe an need not worry about a sudden attack of this disease. SOO BRAKEMAN HELD ON SERIOUS CHARGE

Languishes In The County Jail In This City Indicted Under Two Different Counts.

R. B. Hamilton, of Thief River Falls, Must Stand Trial For Rape and Indecent Assault.

County Attorney Germo and Sheriff Nelson were called to Thief River Falls Monday on a very serious criminal case, and as a result of their visit R. B. Hamilton, a brakeman on the Soo line west from Thief River Falls, is held in the county jail in this city, awaiting trial on the charge of rape. It is understood that the grand jury returned two separate counts against him, one for rape and one for indecent assault, and it possible that he will be tried on both charges.

Hamilton is a freight brakeman on the Soo, and the complainant is at Thief River Falls. She alleges that she boarded the freight at Viking last Monday morning to go to Thief River Falls, and that while alone in the caboose with Hamilton the assault was committed. On reaching Thief River Falls she at once complained to the authorities, with the result that Hamilton was arrested and brought down to the county jail here that evening. His bail was placed at $4000, in default of which he is kept in confinement. It is probable that the trial will come up Monday or Tuesday of next week.

Hamilton, of course, professes innocence of any assault, and the conductor and other brakeman of the crew are here and will be witnesses in the case. Hamilton's wife and her sister have also been here since Monday and will remain for the trial.

County Attorney Germo will conduct the case for the state, and Hamilton will be defended by Attorney Peri W. Mabey, of Thief River Falls, and Attorney F. A. Grady, of this city.

It points out that such attempts coincide generally with royal journeys. The king will start on his visit to Greece on April 13.

RAILROADS RAISE RATES ON GRAIN

BOOST PRICES ON SHIPMENTS FROM CHICAGO TO THE SEABOARD.

LOOKS LIKE RETALIATION

ADVERSE LEGISLATION ONE OF REASONS GIVEN FOR THE ADVANCE.

Washington, March 21. — Suggestions reaching the interstate commerce commission of a purpose on the part of the railroads to make increases in rates on shipments of grain from Chicago to the seaboard, both domestic and for export, approximating 2 to 4 cents per hundred pounds, beginning April 1, afford striking evidence that the railroads plan to make increases in rates. The rate on grain for export from Chicago to New York or Boston during the last two years has ranged from 13 1-2 cents to 15 cents per hundred. The roads have advised the commission that, beginning April 1, the rates will be advanced to 17 1-2 cents and 19 cents, respectively.

Causes Surprise.

The striking feature of this increase is not only the amount of the increase itself, but the fact that grain rates from Chicago to the seaboard should be increased at this time of the year. Almost invariably, when changes were made, rates on grain to the seaboard have been reduced in the spring with the opening of navigation. Advances in rates customarily have been made in the fall, during the period of heavy movement of crops, when navigation on the Great Lakes closed.

Reason for Increase.

The reason given for the advance is increased cost of transportation, coupled with attacks being made upon the roads through adverse legislation in the various states. Whether there will be complaints of such formal character that an investigation will be made by the commission is not known. All the gossip that can be heard about the commission headquarters regarding the advance is in line of regret that the railroads should make their first marked advance in rates upon such staple commodities as grain and grain products.

PREMIER WARNS DUMA.

Must Confine Itself to Legitimate Functions or Be Dissolved.

St. Petersburg, March 21.—The lower house of parliament acquitted itself creditably upon its first encounter with the administration. An overwhelming majority, including the Constitutional Democrats, the Octoberists, the Group of Toil and the Social Revolutionists, refused to be drawn into a fruitless discussion over the ministerial declaraion read by Premier Stolypin and adhered to the decisions reached in caucus to proceed with as little delay as possible to the program of constructing legislation.

Mutual Recriminations.

The only fear of trouble came when the extremists of the right and left participated in the debate. The remarks of these members were devoted largely to recriminations. Neither the vitriolic speeches of Prince Zereteli or M. Alexinsky, Social Democrat, nor the provocatory utterances of M. Purishkevich or M. Krousheven, the anti-Semitic member from Kishinev, roused the anticipated outbreak.

The feature of the day was Premier Stolypin's second speech, with its plain warning to the hot heads that no playing with fire would be permitted, and that the duma must confine itself strictly to its legitimate functions, if it does not wish to be dissolved. The admonition made a notable impression.

Willing to Co-operate.

The council of the empire responded to the ministerial declaration of policy by a resolution expressing willingness to co-operate with the government in its legislative program.

During the debate Count Witte made a brief speech in which he declared he would support this resolution provided it did not imply a vote of confidence in the ministry.

TROOPS ORDERED TO LOOT

NICARAGUAN SOLDIERS ARE INCITED TO FIGHT FOR VENGEANCE.

Puerto Cortez, Honduras, March 21.—A turn of sinister and widespread significance was given to the Central American war by the finding on the persons of captured Nicaraguan soldiers proclamations promising them the loot of the first cities which they can capture in both Honduras and Salvador.

This proclamation at once amounted to a practical declaration of war by Nicaragua against Salvador. It showed that the Nicaraguan common soldiers are at least being sent to fight what they believe

A War of Vengeance,

And it placed Americans in Puerto Cortez and throughout this republic on the anxious seat because of the fact that American residents or American capital form the principal property-holders of most of the Honduras cities, especially those which are richest and therefore most liable to loot in case of success of the Nicaraguan army. Any doubt as to the completeness of such a loot is dispelled not only by the wording of the proclamation but by the experiences had in 1894 by some of the persons now living in Puerto Cortez, who were present at the looting of Cholutaca, Honduras. Nicaraguan soldiers, aided by about 200 of their women, pillaged every house but one in the town.

Americans Complain.

Americans in Puerto Cortez, in view of this proclamation, are preparing to defend themselves if necessary. Some of them complain because the United States has not sent naval protection here. Although measures for self-defense have been taken by many Americans, it is not true, as has been reported, that they have been pressed into the service of Honduras or that they are taking part in any numbers in the hostility.

They and other foreigners are keeping aloof from the trouble.

OLD MAN RESCUED FROM AWFUL DEATH

ENTOMBED AT BOTTOM OF FORTY-FOOT WELL WHEN SIDES CAVE IN.

FIGHTS SLOWLY RISING WATER

FOR TWENTY-ONE HOURS MEN WORK TO SAVE LIFE OF CAGED MAN.

St. Paul, March 22.—Forty feet below the ground, hip deep in icy water, which rising steadily threatened to creep above his head; shut off from freedom by tons of boards and earth, and imprisoned in a narrow tomb reeking with dampness, Ernest Adams, seventy-four years old, a well digger, was rescued yesterday afternoon from an old well on the farm of Albert Unruh, on the Sunfish road, West St. Paul, after having been imprisoner over twenty-one hours.

He was conscious when taken out and had been able to aid the rescuers an hour before his removal by directing them how to proceed. Although an old man, Mr. Adams does not appear to have sustained any serious injury from his experience, and beyond the shock and exposure is unhurt.

Fifty Men Fight to Save Him.

During the twenty-one hours fifty men struggled in turn to reach Adams, who, caged in his living tomb, fought with the chilling waters and managed to keep his feet and his reason. And when at last the huge bucket operated with a windlass was drawn up from the dark, reeking hole, with Adams standing, clinging to the rope, cheers went up that could be heard for blocks around.

Adams was employed by Albert Unruh to replace with stone the wooden siding of the well, which is forty-two feet deep. Adams started at the bottom, and removing the lower boards replaced them with stone. He had worked up about seven feet yesterday afternoon when the siding of the wall caved in, pinning him to the bottom.

Directs His Rescuers.

The story of the accident was flashed around the neighborhood, and within an hour fifty men were at work on the ruins, dragging out the loose dirt and boards.

All through the night the rescuers worked, hoping that Adams was still alive, but hardly daring to believe he could have survived the crash.

Constant conversation was kept up with the imprisoned man to keep up his spirits. He was able to direct the work so as to make each stroke tell.

About 1 o'clock Adams shouted, "I can see light. You are almost here."

A few minutes later a handful of boards was ripped away and the prison flooded with the light of a beautiful spring day. The bucket was lowered and Adams was brought to the surface.

His first words were: "Thank God you got here in time. I don't know when the sunlight seemed as good to me as it does now."

London, March 20. — Almost within sight of the wrecked White Star line steamer Suevic, the Elder-Dempster line steamer Jebba ran on the rocks under the cliffs, near Prawle Point, in the early hours of the morning.

Her seventy passengers and her crew were safely taken ashore by the breeches buoy. The Jebba will prove a total loss.

Details received of the disaster to the Suevic, with nearly 600 passengers and crew on board, show that she struck the Brandies rock, close under the Lazard lighthouse, at about 10:30 Sunday night, and probably will be a total wreck. Lifeboats and tugs from the Lizard and Falmouth soon reached the scene and by 1 p. m. all the passengers had been landed, but the members of the crew were still standing by the wreck.

The bill requiring locomotive engineers to have three years' experience as firemen, or one year as engineer, or three years in both capacities, was killed.

The following were among the important bills passed at the session:

To authorize cities to acquire, construct, own, operate and lease public utilities and to provide means therefor; relating to foreign corporations; relating to township delinquent road taxes; relating to the publication of the notice of application for license to sell intoxicating liquors; the incorporation, organization and government of cities; prohibiting the manufacture and sale for use as food of certain articles and substances; relating to special tax levy for the payment of municipal indebtedness to the state fund; relating to the dairy and food department. A large number of bills were acted on in committee of the whole at the afternoon session.

LAND FRAUD TRUE BILLS.

Chicago, March 20.—General Overseer Voliva of Zion City is on the verge of nervous prostration. PROMINENT IN THE PUBLIC EYE

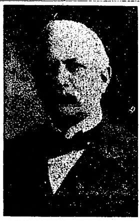
PRINCE HENRY OF HOLLAND,

Queen Wilhelmina's consort, who took an active part in the rescue work from the terrible wreck of the Berlin, is noted for his extreme simplicity of manner and dislike for court etiquette. At the time of his marriage there were signs that he would not be popular with the people—they were so devoted to their young queen that they regarded him with something akin to jealousy; but time has changed all that, and now the prince is as much a favorite as the queen herself..



JOSEPH B. FORTKER,

United States Senator From Ohio.

GOV. JAMES O. DAVIDSON

Of Wisconsin, mentioned as a candidate to succeed Senator Spooner.

GOV. JOHN BURKE

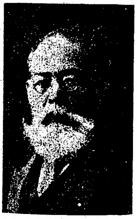
Of North Dakota has instructed the assistant attorney general to conduct a general campaign against liquor law violation, and he has shown no mercy to "blind pig" proprietors of Bismarck, the state capital, and of other towns, who have pleaded with him to give them time to dispose of valuable stocks on hand.

WILLIAM ROCKEFELLER,

Who says sensational flurry in stock market was a mystery to him.

KING FREDERICH AUGUST

Of Saxony is going early in March—according to present arrangements—to pay a visit to their majesties of Great Britain. From England the king will go to Spain and Portugal—the longest journey he has undertaken since his accession.



COUNT SINZO AOKI,

Diplomatic representative at Washington of the Japanese emperor, upon whom now devolves the delicate task of negotiating with the United States government a treaty for the exclusion from this country of Japanese coolies.

TWO BOYS AND A GIIRL.

Michigan Woman Gives Birth to Triplets.

Menominee, Mich., March 19. — Up to Thursday morning Mrs. Joseph Martell of Daggett, Menominee county, had been the mother of thirteen children, twelve of whom are living. Considering the fact that Mrs. Martell is barely thirty-nine years of age, this is a creditable achievement. Thursday forenoon Mrs. Martell gave birth to triplets, two boys and a girl. The babies are all bright and active.

OFFICIAL PAPER RED LAKE FALLS CITY

$1.00 Per Year in Advance

BEFORE a new design is adopted for gold coins, a good many of us would like to see what the old ones look like.

DULUTH sees great possibilities in that new steel plant. Already, to the average Zenithian, Minneapolis and St. Paul are in the country town class, and Chicago isn't so much.

CONGRESSMAN Volstead is being touted as a candidate for governor, but it occurs to the ordinary man who looks on the financial side that $7,500 a year as congressman is a little more inviting than $5,000 as governor.

THE Little Falls Herald voices the sentiments of northern Minnesota in saying: "The legislator from the small cities who votes against a distance tariff bill is guilty of high treason to his constituents and faithless to his trust."

THE raging Red is having trouble again because it loosens up at the head before the mouth is thawed out. On this theory the Moorhead side of the river ought to break up two weeks before the Fargo side is affected. Moorhead is conceded to be that much warmer.

"HAVE one on me" will be an unknown remark soon if a bill introduced in the house Monday escapes being killed off and laid silently away. The bill makes it a misdemeanor for any person to "treat" another in any place where liquor is sold, and imposes heavy penalties on the saloonkeeper, the man who "buys" and the man who "accepts" the treat.

THE St. Peter Herald says that "solemn assertions are made in the twin city papers that leading members of the state legislature favor compromising on a 2½-cent passenger rate, hoping thereby to secure freight rate concessions from the railroads. The leaders may like this plan, but the majority of the lawmakers know that the people expect 2-cent fares and a distance tariff bill. These men are virtually pledged to both propositions, and they will suffer if the pledges are not redeemed."

L. R. Cowles, Portland, Ore., was troubled with constipation since childhood and had to use medicine continually to move his bowels. He was in very bad shape. Here is what he says after using one bottle of Dr. Adler's Treatment: "I think your medicine is a wonder. I never felt or looked so well as I do now. Although I am a telegraph operator and work nights, I have gained 10 pounds in the last month." Large dollar bottles at W. A. Schrieter's.

EXCHANGE ECHOES.

St. Peter Herald: As late as five o'clock yesterday afternoon St. Paul and Minneapolis had not volunteered to furnish $500,000 of the million dollar fund for an exposition which will be of benefit to the twin cities only.

Perham Enterprise: If either the two cent bill, the reciprocal demmurrage bill or the distance tariff bill is killed by the present legislature, the country members of that body will be held directly responsible.

Alexandria Post-News: If politicians wish to see the corrupt practices act repealed they should urge their objections upon more logical grounds than that it makes hypocrites and liars of candidates. False swearing is but evidence of a long acquired habit, which no law will break. That the law fails in its purpose might be good grounds for its repeal, but that it makes liars of honored and respected citizens, is a false statement and not argument.

Sauk Centre Herald: Governor Johnson does not seem to be making as many blunders as his opponents are wishing he would.

Anoka Free Press: Governor Johnson of Minnesota is more popular throughout the country and of far greater strength in his own state than was ever any of those men who got to be president, Roosevelt not excepted. Does that stand for anything in casting about for strong and desirable presidential timber.

Brainerd Dispatch: The United States Steel company has had a prosperous year, so the dispatches tell us, the undivided profits being nearly $98,000,000. That would be considered a fairly good year for a country newspaper but comparisons are odious.

Martin County Sentinel: If our lawmakers at St. Paul vote the Twin Cities a million dollars to help them get a big crowd there to spend their money next fall, and do nothing for our county fairs, they will hear a protest from the "rooral deestricks" that will jar them completely off their little pedestals of popularity.

Brain Leaks.

(From the Commoner)

We are not wholly to blame for making a mistake, but it is our fault if we make the same mistake twice.

A man named Wallet is running for office in St. Louis. The wallet has been in evidence too much in our political games.

"Eat whatever your appetite craves" says a New York physician. That's the kind of advice we like to hear. But what about getting what our appetite craves?

A whole lot of men who are always talking about their willingness to die for their rights won't even take the trouble to go to the polls and vote for their rights.

Wouldn't this be a great old world if people would do as we say, not as we do?

When a man has plenty it is easy to tell the people what to do with what they have.

A bird in the bush is better than two on the Easter bonnet.

A square meal to one who needs it is better than an investment in Easter lilies.

The last congress appropriated $177,000,000 for the army and navy and $8,000,000 for agriculture. The armor plate manufacturers and the gun-smiths and shipbuilders wonder why eight millions should be thus wasted.

The United States supreme court has decided that the railroads must pay their taxes in Nebraska. The mere citizen cannot hold his taxes until the court acts. With him it is either pay or be sold out.

"Preventics" will promptly check a cold or the grippe when taken early or at the "sneeze stage." Preventics cure seated colds as well. Preventics are little candy cold cure tablets, and Dr. Shoop, Racine, Wis., will gladly mail you samples and a book on colds free, if you will write him. The samples prove their merit. REVIVAL MEETINGS STARTED

Evangelists Hamilton and Bursk Open Services at Presbyterian Church.

Evangelist John S. Hamilton and Singer John R. Bursk arrived in the city on Tuesday and began meetings at the Presbyterian church the same night. In spite of bad weather the meeting the first night was largely attended. Rev. Hamilton spoke to Christians on the duty of being "helpers." It was a thoughtful and stirring discourse.

Prof. Bursk organized a large chorus from the singers of the audience and desires to invite all other singers to join the chorus. He also sang two gospel solos in a very winning way. He has a pleasing voice and sings very earnestly. He is planning to organize a "Sunbeam Chorus" of boys and girls, and to make their singing a special feature of the meetings. The orchestra will be present except when detained by other duties, and will assist in making the music a special feature of these meetings.

On Wednesday and Thursday the Evangelists accompanied by Rev. Knox visited a large proportion of the businees houses to become acquainted with the men and invite them to attend the meetings. Services begin each night at 7:30. The meetings will last only a short time and you urged to attend as often as possible.

DAIRYING PAYS THIS MAN.

C. O. Carlson, of Erskine, who won the first prize in the Jim Hill contest last summer, spoke at Twin Valley recently and talked interestingly and in a business way about the dairy cow and how to handle and feed her. He stated that on his farm 44 cows are being milked this winter. The milk is weighed and tested the 1st and 15th of each month, samples taken and tested for butter fat. The figures for Feb. 1st are as follows: Pounds of milk for the day, 879.2. Percentage of butter fat, 4 1 or 36 pounds of butter. Price 31c per pound, giving a daily income of $11.16 per day or $334.80 per month. The cost of feeding the cows per month is $120.43, leaving a net profit of $214.37 per month. One object of weighing and testing the milk is to enable one to feed the cow the proper amount of grain, one third the amount in weight of milk given. Another object is to enable one to know the relative values of his cows that the best ones may be kept and the poorer ones got rid of.

Concert Was Good.

The March band concert, given at the Met last Thursday evening, was well patronized, and as is the habit the organization gave a splendid accounting of itself, the entire program being one of keen enjoyment. The band numbers were all good and were given liberal applause. The specialties were also of an unusually high order, and were all enthusiastically received. Clem Brunelle played a pretty cornet solo, which was very well rendered. Mrs. E. F. Marshall sang "The Swallow" in a delightfully pleasing manner and was given a hearty encore. The band orchestra rendered two pleasing numbers and the specialties were finished by a clarinet solo by Bandmaster Bruckman, accompanied on the piano by Miss Igna Hamry. The solo was a very heavy one, but nothing like that bothers the Herr Bruckman, and his work was away ahead of anything ever heard here before. The accompaniment to the solo was also very fine, and this number was surely one of the finest features of the winter's series of concerts. The concert for April will terminate the indoor series, and an effort will be made to have several features entirely out of the ordinary incorporated in the program.

Pleth Won't Leave.

Julius Pleth, the hustling Plummer real estate dealer, has announced his intention of remaining in Red Lake county, and will not leave Plummer for the cities, as was intended. The news of Mr. Pleth's decision to remain with us will surely be well received by his legion of friends in all parts of the county as there is no one who knows Julius but what is anxious to have him remain a resident of the best county in the valley. Mr. Pleth plans on a big business in the real estate line during the coming summer, and the Courier hopes he will get it—and more.

Another Use for Electricity.

For electricity, still another use has been found—namely, in the launching of vessels. The British battleship Agamemnon, recently launched, slid into the water by this new method. A series of interlocking levers were connected with the electrical arrangement. As a safeguard against disease we suggest the daily use of golden grain belt beer. It is brewed from the best of nature's products and should go into the home as a healthmaker. Order of your nearest dealer or be supplied by Alex Thompson, Crookston.

The News—No Pure Drug Cough Cure Laws would be needed if all Cough Cures were like Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure is—and has been for 20 years. The National law now requires that if any poisons enter into a cough mixture, it must be printed on the label or package. For this reason mothers and others, should insist on having Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. No poison marks on Dr. Shoop's labels—and none in the medicine else it must by law be on the label. And it's not only safe, but it is said to be by those who know it best, a truly remarkable cough remedy. Take no chance, particularly with your children. Insist on having Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. Compare carefully the Dr. Shoop package with others and see. No poison marks there. You can always be on the safe side by demanding Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. Simply refuse to accept any other. Sold by all dealers.

Karl M. Hansen expects to ship his household goods to Thief River the last of next week and with his family will again take up a residence at that place. Mr. and Mrs. Hansen are well liked by the people here, who are sorry to see them leave the city.

A trick roller skater from Binford, North Dakota, gave an exhibition at the Met. Tuesday evening to a small audience. The fellow is said to have been very good on the rollers, but from the fact that there was so much else doing on the same evening, he drew a very small crowd.

Attorney Fred L. Farley this week closed a deal for the purchase of the Hatten residence property on State street, which he has occupied for the past year. This is one of the nicest residence properties in the city, and Mr. Farley has cause to be pleased with his bargain.

County Treasurer Tandberg's family are again residents of Red Lake Falls, having moved into their north side home Thursday last. The people of Red Lake Falls are pleased to welcome this estimable family to the ranks of the residents of the best town in the valley again.

Prof. E. W. Chamberlain went over to Fosston las Friday evening where he officiated as one of the judges at a debate held in the school there that evening. The debate was between the boys and girls of the Fosston schools, and very naturally the judges' decision favored the feminine debators.

Mrs. A. E. Sorenson, wife of mail carrier Sorenson, of Lambert, was operated on for appendicitis at the Deaconess hospital at grand Forks Saturday, and is reported as getting along nicely. Mrs. Sorenson has suffered with this disease for several years past, and hopes now to find permanent relief.

At the village election in Oslo on Tuesday of this week the citizens decided to change the name of their town to Soo City. Several reasons were given for wanting the change, one of them being that mail and telegrams were frequently being missent to a discontinued office by that name in southern Minnesota.

Frank E. Hunt has been at Brooks several days this week taking stock and getting things in shape to take charge of the hardware store he purchased at that place. Brooks is growing nicely and is a first-class business point, and with Mr. Hunt as their hardwareman they will be assured of a first class store.

N J. St. Aubin and family will return to Red Lake Falls from Devils Lake early next month and will again become residents of this city, occupying their home on Champagne avenue. S. L. Lewis, who is at present occupying the house, will move his family to the LaBissoniere house now occupied by former treasurer Hansen.

Jack Lagassy arrived here Sunday morning from Saskatoon, Canada, and remained here until Tuesday, to attend the last rites over the remains of his aged father, who died last Thursday. Jack is engaged in business in the Canadian country and is prospering, which is pleasing news to his many friends here.

The following letters remain unclaimed in the postoffice at Red Lake Falls for the week ending March 23: Mamie Akerlund, Ativin Perrinvo and Peter Elleson. If not called for in two weeks these letters will be sent to the dead letter office as prescribed by law. In calling for the above please say "advertised." E. F. Marshall, P.M.

The state fish and game commission will ask the legislature for an appropriation of about $1,200 for the purpose of securing a "fish" car. The car is to be specially constructed for the purpose of transporting fish from the hatcheries to the different lakes and streams throughout the state. Wisconsin has two cars and the fish and game commission is planning to secure another one,

State Auditor S. G. Iverson has issued a booklet entitled "Great Opportunities in Minnesota." The booklet contains full information regarding the sale of school and other state lands during June and July. Each county is dealt with separately and the booklet is illustrated with views of farms throughout the state where the land is to be offered for sale.

The funeral services over the remains of Olivier Lagassy, who died last Thursday were held from St. Joseph's church Saturday morning, a large number of sorrowing friends and relatives attending. On account of the condition of the country roads the interment was not made until Monday afternoon, when the body was taken to Terrebone and interred in the cemetery there.

Sunday is Easter—marking the termination of the Lenten season. Easter falls considerably earlier this year than usual, and as a result it is likely that the advance showing of the season's styles in feminine headgear will be short and sweet—unless, perchance, the weather man is on his best behavior for the occasion. An Easter in March in this region, however, can never be counted on as particularly balmy, and it is probable that the feminine population will await a more favorable opportunity to spring the new fangled ideas in wearing apparel.

Clyde J. Pryor and A. G. Rutledge have purchased the Bemidji Pioneer and took charge last week. Mr. Pryor will be business manager and Mr. Rutledge will have charge of the editorial end. Both are experienced men and have the best wishes of the newspaper boys for success beyond expectation. Mr. Pryor was formerly a Red Lake Falls resident, and the people here feel interested in his success.

A big bunch of Thief Riverites came down Monday evening and spent Tuesday here in attendance at court. Some were subpoenaed as witnesses, others had cases and still others were merely onlookers at the court's doings, Among those who were here the Courier noticed the following: Dr. Grundy, Frank McGinty, James Farr, D. Lesarge, Bob Lee, G. G. Williams, Alex Sweaas, Perl W. Mabey, E. M. Evenson, Chief Erickson, and Jas. Nelson.

About twenty-five of the engineers and firemen who run out of Thief River Falls have sent in a petition for a charter and in a few weeks will organize a Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen. The trainmen at Thief River Falls organized a few months ago and now have a strong and flourishing lodge. It is quite likely that that the engineers and firemen will have equally as strong an organization when all who have signified a willingness to become members of the organization.

Several southern Minnesota towns have already commenced to have "market days" and the idea seems to be prevalent all through the state. Red Lake Falls had two very successful market days last fall, and it might be timely to suggest that a movement be started toward having one or more this spring. These affairs are certainly of great benefit to the farmers, merchants and people generally, as they bring the public in touch with one another, and develop friendships not otherwise made. Let's have a market day in April by all means.

Remi Fortier was over from Crookston Tuesday visiting with his son, Joe. While here Mr. Fortier was circulating a petition among the business people, asking the legislature to make a substantial appropriation to aid the state farm school at Crookston. The petition was liberally signed, as the residents of the Red River Valley have every reason in the world to give this school all the support possible in every line. The Crookston school is fast becoming one of the leading experimental farms in the northwest, and is every day an excellent standing ad for the entire Valley.

At the head of the editorial page it will be noticed that the name of John E. King again appears as publisher, with that of Sam S. Haislet as local editor. The Courier feels that both are so well known to the people of Red Lake Falls and Red Lake county that no lengthy "introductory" is needed. We can promise without fear of failure, that that the Courier will be made a local newspaper in all that the name implies, and shall try and make it a credit to the city. Naturally we would be pleased to receive a share of the patronage of the public, and will endeavor by giving good work and fair treatment to merit the confidence of all.

Merchant H. H. Zaiser has been in Chicago during the past ten days and writes home that he has purchased the finest line of summer dress goods, etc., ever brought to Red Lake county. The goods will be here in a very short time, and Mr. Zaiser is anxious that the women folks wait for their arrival before making their purchases.

If "Bill" Cox was anywhere in these diggins the Courier would say he was responsible for the following exchange item, which is worth reading, at least: "There are two kinds of girls in the world, the girl who who works and the girl who gads. Commend us to the former. Work lends dignity to a pretty girl, is an added charm to her. The girl who works, God bless her, combines the useful and ornamental. She might gad about, roll on sofas, gossip and read story books, but she prefers to be of some account in the world and goes out, stenographer, teacher, saleslady or housekeeper, bravely makes her own way. Such are the salts of the earth and of such is the kingdom of heaven."

The breakup of the latter part of last week played havoc in general with the country roads, and as a result traffic was at a standstill for several days. The Star mail carriers failed to get here at all from Friday until Tuesday, and then their trips were extremely difficult ones and were made under almost impossible conditions. The large amount of snow throughout the country had become well trodden down during the winter, so that rigs could be driven over high drifts with comfort. The warm sun of the last few days of last week completely changed conditions, however, and in many places the horses would go nearly out of sight in the snow, breaking through at every step. No travel was attempted for several days, and while conditions are somewhat better at present writing it will be some little time before the roads are in satisfactory shape for comfortable travel.

ANOTHER NEW TOWN.

Township 154-39, on the reservation, was organized as a town last week by the board of commissioners and was named Reiner. The first election of officers will be held at thh Reiner post office on April 6, when the organization will be completed. This leaves but one unorganized town on the new reservation.

THE ARTISTIC WALL.

One of Solid Color Will Always Give Best Effect.

The dearest, daintiest, most artistic wall is a solid colored wall. It furnishes a perfect background for all kinds of pictures, it throws them out in their correct proportions, and does not detract from their artistic value. The solid colored wall is also much better as a background for furniture, and harmonizes much more artistically with carpets and rugs than any other method of wall treatment. The less breaking up of color on a wall the more artistic it is.

The most successful form of the solid colored wall is an alabastined wall. There is as much difference between tinted walls, as there is between shoddy and all-wool gowns. The shoddy gown holds its color for a few days, while the all-wool keeps its color to the very last thread, so also in solid colored walls, there are shoddy walls and permanently colored walls which retain their color down to the very last particle. The ideal wall coating never rubs off, never flakes nor chips off and is always ready for a fresh coat. If there is wallpaper on the wall, soak it off with warm water, then go over the plaster after you have removed the paper with warm water to remove every trace of paste. Have the wall thoroughly clean for a clean wall cannot be built on an unclean foundation. If there are any particles of foreign matter adhering to the wall scrape them off with a putty knife. Then if there are any discolorations on the wall, size it with a material made from cheap varnish, thinned down with benzine and japan added for a drier, then cover your wall with your tinting material.

Be sure your man uses a tinting material mixed with cold water. If he comes to you and asks for warm water, you can make up your mind that there is glue in the material which he proposes to put on your wall, and you can be certain that you are going to have a shoddy wall, for glue means shoddy. Glue means that it will hold its color long enough for the man to collect his bill and not much longer. Insist on your tinting material being mixed with clear, cold water. Be sure that your wall is made from pure materials, then you will have a permanent, artistic, sanitary wall. A wall that will be a "thing of beauty and a joy forever."

Two Eagles at One Shot.

Mr. Peleg Pritchard, a farmer who resides on his farm about two miles from the city, killed two large eagles at one shot.

The two eagles were in mortal combat on the ground from which they did not desist at the approach of Mr. Pritchard. Mr. Pritchard drew the talons of each from the body of the other after they were shot dead. They measure over eight feet from the tip of one wing to the tip of the other. They were the largest ever killed in this section.—Raleigh News-Observer.

CEMETERY FOR 4,000 DOGS.

Marble Slabs Commemorate Some of the More Notable Pets.

On the occasion of a lawsuit brought by a marble cutter some interesting details have come out in a Paris court concerning the dog cemetery founded on the Ile des Ravageurs, near Paris in 1899.

There are already 4,000 "graves" in the cemetery. Some of them, leased for a long term, have cost as much as 1,000 francs. The lowest price paid for any concession is 5 francs and the expenses of the most discreet burial are 25 francs.

Visitors to the cemetery pay 50 centimes as an entrance fee. On one of the tombstones they may read "Homage to a faithful heart" and on another "Here lies Black, killed by a civilized savage." The above victim, explains the keeper, died at the hands of an indignant concierge.

Another marble slab mounted on cement rock contains the following: "Neither name nor date: what matters it?" And again: "Beneath these stones reside the material remains of that which during its life was my joy and consolation."

FOOLED THE PREACHER.

A Doctor's Brother Thought Postum Was Coffee.

A wise doctor found out coffee was hurting him, so he quit drinking it.

He was so busy with his practice, however, that his wife had to write how he fooled his brother, a clergyman, one day at dinner. She says:

"Doctor found coffee was injuring him and decided to give Postum a trial, and we have used it now for four years, with continued benefit. In fact, he is now free from the long train of ills that follow coffee drinking.

"To show how successful we are in making Postum properly I will relate an incident. At a dinner we gave, Doctor suggested we serve Postum instead of ordinary coffee.

"Doctor's brother, a Clergyman, supposed it was old fashioned coffee and remarked, as he called for his second cup: 'If you do preach against coffee, I see you haven't forgotten how to make it.'"

This goes to show that well-made—fully boiled—Postum has much the flavor and richness of good coffee although it has an individuality all its own. A ten days' trial will prove that it has none of the poisonous effect of ordinary coffee, but will correct the troubles caused by coffee. "There's a reason." THE FATAL GLOVE.

BY CLARA AUGUSTA

CHAPTER IX.—(CONTINUED.)

Darby produced a handkerchief which had belonged to Mr. Paul Linmere, and which he had found in his rooms, lying on his dressing-table. He showed this to the dog; Leo snuffed at it, and gave a sharp grunt of displeasure.

"We want you to find him, Leo, good dog," said the Italian, stroking the silky ears of the dog; "find your master."

Leo understood, but he looked around in evident perplexity.

"Take him to the depot!" said Mr. Trevlyn, "he may find the trail there."

They went to the station; the dog sniffed hurriedly at the platform, and in a moment more dashed off into the highway leading to Harrison Park.

"Him got him!" cried Pietro; "him find my master!"

CHAPTER X.

THE WHOLE COMPANY joined in following the dog. He went straight ahead, his nose to the ground, his fleet limbs bearing him along with a rapidity that the anxious followers found it hard to emulate.

At a brook which crossed the road he stopped, seemed a little confused, crossed it finally on stepping stones, paused a moment by the side of a bare nut tree, leaped the fence, and dashed off through a grass field. Keeping steadily on, he made for the grounds of the Park, passed the drained pond, and the frost-ruined garden, and pushing before the inclosure where slept the Harrison dead, he lifted his head and gave utterance to a howl so wild, so savagely unearthly, that it chilled the blood in the veins of those who heard. An instant he paused, and then dashing through the hedge, was lost to view.

"He is found! My master is found!" said Pietro, solemnly, removing his cap, and wiping a tear from his eye. For the man was attached to Mr. Paul Linmere, in his rough way, and the tear was one of genuine sorrow.

His companions looked at each other. Alexandrine grasped the arm of Margie, and leaned heavily upon her.

"Let us go to the house—" she faltered. "I cannot bear it."

"I will know the worst," said Margie, hoarsely, and they went on together.

It was so singular, but no one had thought to look within the graveyard enclosure; perhaps if they had thought of it, they judged it impossible that a murderer should select such a locality for the commission of his crime.

Mr. Darby opened the gate, entered the yard, and stopped. So did the others. All saw at once that the search was ended. Across the path leading to the graves of Mr. and Mrs. Harrison, lay Paul Linmere. He was white and ghastly; his forehead bare, and his sightless eyes wide open, looking up to the sun of noonday. His right hand lay on his breast, his left still tightly grasped the turf upon which it had fixed its hold in the cruel death agony. His garments were stiff with his own blood, and the dirk knife, still buried to the hilt in his heart, told the story of his death.

Leo crouched a little way off, his eyes jubilant, his tail beating the ground, evincing the greatest satisfaction. All present knew that the dog rejoiced at the death of his master.

Alexandrine took a step toward the dead man, her back to the horror-stricken group by the gate. She stopped suddenly, and lifted something from the ground.

Darby, alert and watchful, was by her side in a moment.

"What have you there?" he demanded.

"My glove which I dropped," she answered, quietly, holding up the dainty bit of embroidered kid.

The detective turned away satisfied; but Margie saw the girl's hand shake, and her lips grow pale as marble, the moment Darby's keen eye was removed from her face.

The discovery of the remains was followed by a long and tedious investigation. There was an inquest, and a rigid examination of every person who could by any possibility be imagined capable of throwing any light on the murder, and after all was over, the mystery was just as dark as it was at first.

Nothing was found to furnish the slightest clue to the assassin, except a white cambric handkerchief just inside the graveyard, marked with the single initial "A" in one corner. This handkerchief might have belonged to the murderer, and it might have belonged to Mr. Linmere—that could not be determined. The article was given into the keeping of Mr. Darby; and after three days lying in state at Harrison Park, the body of Mr. Linmere was taken to Albany, where his relatives were buried, and laid away for its last sleep

Mr. Trevlyn offered a large reward for the apprehension of the murderer, or for information which would lead to his apprehension; and the town authorities offered an equal sum. Mr. Darby was retained to work upon the case, and there it rested.

Margie uttered no word in the matter. She was stunned by the suddenness of the blow, and she could not help being painfully conscious that she felt relieved by the death of this unfortunate man. God had taken her case into his hands in a manner too solemnly fearful for her to question.

Three months after the death of Paul Linmere, Margie met Archer Trevlyn at the house of Alexandrine Lee. He was quite a constant visitor there, Mrs. Lee told her, with a little conscious pride, for young Trevlyn was being spoken of in business circles as a rising young man. He was to be admitted to partnership in the firm of Belgrade & Co., in the spring. And this once effected, his fortune was made.

There was a little whist party at Mrs. Lee's that evening, and Margie was persuaded to remain. After a while the company asked for music. Whist, the books of engravings, and the bijoux of the center table were exhausted, and small talk flagged. Margie was reluctantly prevailed upon to play.

She was not a wonderful performer, but she had a fine ear, and played with finish and accuracy. But she sang divinely. To oblige her friends, she sang a few new things, and then pausing, was about to rise from the instrument, when Mr. Trevlyn came to her side.

"Will you play something for me?" he asked, stooping over her. His dark, passionate eyes brought the blood to her face—made her restless and nervous in spite of herself.

"What would you like?" she managed to ask.

"This!" He selected an old German ballad, long ago a favorite in the highest musical circles, but now cast aside for something newer and more brilliant. A simple, touching little song of love and sorrow.

She was about to decline singing it, but something told her to beware of false modesty, and she sang it through.

"I thank you!" he said, earnestly, when she had finished. "It has done me good. My mother used to sing that song, and I have never wanted to hear it from any other lips—until now."

Alexandrine glided along, as radiant as a humming-bird, her cheeks flushed, her black eyes sparkling, her voice sweet as a siren's.

"Sentimentalizing, I declare!" she exclaimed, gayly; "and singing that dreadful song, too! Ugh! it gives me the cold shudders to listen to it! How can you sing it, Margie, dear?"

"Miss Harrison sang it at my request, Miss Lee," said Trevlyn, gravely, "It is an old favorite of mine. Shall I not listen to you now?"

Alexandrine took the seat Margie had vacated, and glanced up at the two faces so near her.

"Why, Margie!" she said, "a moment ago I thought you were a rose, and now you are a lily! What is the matter?"

"Nothing, thank you," returned Margie, coldly. "I am weary, and will go home soon, I think."

Trevlyn looked at her with tender anxiety, evidently forgetful that he had requested Miss Lee to play.

"You are wearied," he said. "Shall I call your carriage?"

"If you please, yes. Miss Lee, I am sure you will excuse me."

"I shall be obliged to, I suppose."

Trevlyn put Margie's shawl around her, and led her to the carriage. After he had assisted her in, he touched lightly the hand he had just released, and said "Good-night," his very accent a blessing.

CHAPTER XI.

IN February Mr. Trevlyn received a severe shock. His aged wife had been an inmate of an asylum almost since the death of her son Hubert; and Mr. Trevlyn, though he had loved her with his whole soul, had never seen her face in all those weary years.

Suddenly, without any premonitory symptoms, her reason returned to her, and save that she was unmindful of the time that had elapsed during her insanity, she was the same Caroline Trevlyn of old.

They told her cautiously of her husband's old age, for the unfortunate woman could not realize that nearly twenty years had passed since the loss of her mind. The first desire she expressed was to see "John," and Mr. Trevlyn was sent for.

He came, and went into the presence of the wife from whom he had been so long divided, alone. No one knew what passed between them. The interview was a lengthy one, and Mr. Trevlyn came forth from it, animated by a new born hope. The wife of his youth was to be restored to him!

He made arrangements to take her home, but alas! they were never destined to be carried into effect. The secret fears of the physician were realized even sooner than he had expected. The approach of dissolution had dissolved the clouds so long hanging over the mind of Caroline Trevlyn. She lived only two days after the coming of her husband, and died in his arms, happy in the belief that she was going to her son.

Mr. Trevlyn returned home, a changed being. All his asperity of temper was gone; he was as gentle as a child. Whole days he would sit in the chair where his wife used to sit in the happy days of her young wifehood, speaking to no one, smiling sometimes to himself, as though he heard some inner whisperings which pleased him.

One day he roused himself seemingly, and sent for Mr. Speedwell, his attorney, and Dr. Drake, his family physician. With these gentlemen he was closeted the entire forenoon; and from that time forward his hold on the the world and its things seemed to relax.

One morning, when Margie went to take his gruel up to him—a duty she always performed herself—she found him sitting in his armchair, wide awake, but incapable of speech or motion.

The physician, hastily summoned, confirmed her worst fears. Mr. Trevlyn had been smitten with paralysis. He was in no immediate danger, perhaps; he might live for years, but was liable to drop away at any moment. It was simply a question of time.

Toward the close of the second day after his attack, the power of speech returned to Mr. Trevlyn.

"Margie!" he said, feebly. "Margie, come here." She flew to his side.

"I want you to send for Archer Trevlyn," he said, with great difficulty.

She made a gesture of surprise.

"You think I am not quite right in my mind, Margie, that I should make that request. My mind was never clearer, my mental sight never more correct. I want to see my grandson."

Margie despatched a servant with a brief note to Archer, informing him of his grandfather's desire, and then sat down to wait his coming.

It was a wild, stormy night in March; the boisterous wind beat against the old mansion, and like a suffering human being, shrieked down the wide, old-fashioned chimneys.

In a lull of the storm there was a tap at the chamber door. Margie opened it, and stood face to face with Archer Trevlyn.

"Come in," she whispered, "he is asleep."

"No, I am not asleep," said the sick man; "has my grandson come?"

"He is here," said Margie. "I will leave him with you, dear guardian. Let him ring for me when you want me."

"Remain here, Margaret. I want you to be a witness to what passes between us. I have no secrets from you, dear child, none whatever. Archer, come hither."

Trevlyn advanced, his face pale, his eyes moist with tears. For, having forgiven his grandparent, he had been growing to feel for the desolate old man a sort of filial tenderness, and strong in his fresh young manhood, it seemed terrible to him to see John Trevlyn lying there in his helplessness and feebleness, waiting for death.

"Come hither, Archer," said the tremulous voice, "and put your hand on mine. I cannot lift a finger to you, but I want to feel once more the touch of kindred flesh and blood. I have annoyed you and yours sadly, my poor boy, but death sweeps away all enmities, and all shadows. I see so clearly now. O, if I had only seen before!"

Arch knelt by the side of his bed, holding the old man's withered hands in his. Margie stood a little apart, regarding the pair with moist eyes.

"Call me grandfather once, my son; I have never heard the name from the lips of my kindred."

"Grandfather! O grandfather!" cried the young man, "now that you will let me call you so, you must not die! You must live for me!"

CONTRABAND ANTIQUITIES.

Italian Works of Art Find Their Way to the Market Despite the Law.

From the London News: Some days ago a well known dealer in antiquities offered for sale to the Louvre museum, in Paris, a splendid collection of ancient silver vases from Italy of Greek or Italian workmanship. The museum was unable to pay the price asked—£20,000—and declined the bargain. The Italian minister of education, having learned of this, has taken proceedings under the Pacca law against Signor Di Prisco, the owner of these antiquities. The latter is a large land owner at Bosco Reale. He secretly made excavations of his estate and found twenty-eight silver vases of remote antiquity.

Notwithstanding the Italian law prohibiting owners of antiquities from sending them out of the country without leave, or, rather, on account of this law, which prevents old works of art from commanding anything like their natural price in the impoverished country, Signor Di Pasco smuggled his find out of Italy and offered it to a Paris dealer for £5,000. Continuing meanwhile his search, he found other silver vases, which duly joined their fellows in Paris, and the whole lot was offered to the Louvre. The Italian minister of education throws interesting light on the facilities which underpaid officials are supposed to afford to illicit exporters of antiquities. He issues a notification that, should any official be found to have connived at this latest evasion of the Pacca law, they will be criminally prosecuted.

Total Eclipses Are Rare.

It is a fact well known to astronomers that the average number of total and partial eclipses in any one year is four; that the maximum is seven, and the minimum two. Where only two occur they are always both of the sun. There are a great many more eclipses of the sun in the course of a year or a hundred years than there are of the moon; this fact notwithstanding, however, London, the metropolis of the world, seems to be a place where such obstructions of the sun's light seldom occur.

The rate at which the Zulus can travel upon an emergency is astonishing. Some will go as much as fifty miles in six hours; eight miles an hour is an ordinary pace.

Feared a Consultation.

The latest story about Senator Pettus of Alabama is of how he was overcome with vertigo some time ago while working on a law case in his Alabama office. He recovered in a few minutes, and his clerk said he was going to send for a doctor.

"All right," said the octogenarian "but don't get more than one." When the doctor arrived the senator said: "You are the only doctor here are you? You're sure there's only one of you?" "Oh, yes, senator," said the physician, who thought the old gentleman had some confidential communication to make.

"I'm mighty glad of it," the senator said, with a sigh of relief. "I'm sure I'll get well if there is only one of you fellows here, but I could not survive a consultation."

Different Now.

Ascum—You used to complain that your wife was constantly asking you for money.

Peckham—O, that was when we were first married. All that's changed now.

Ascum—Yes?

Peckham—Yes; now I ask her for it when I can sum up courage.

SCIATIC TORTURE

A Locomotive Engineer Tells How He Was Cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Pain that seems almost unbearable is a characteristic of sciatic rheumatism. In some cases the pain is knife-like, sharp or shooting; in others it is dull and aching. Sciatica is stubborn in resisting treatment and the patient frequently suffers for years. This was the case with Mr. Herbert E. Spaulding, a locomotive engineer on the Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railway, whose home is at Longview, Texas.

"While running an engine some years ago," he says, "I fell off and hurt my knee and spine and I have always considered this to be the cause of my illness. The sciatica took hold of me from my heel to the back of my head. The pain was the worst I ever suffered in my life and my leg and back were twisted out of shape. I was under a physician's care for several months and for six months could not get out of bed. I also went to Hot Springs but came back in a worse condition than when I went.

"It was when I was down in bed that I heard of the case of a Mr. Allison, a much older man than myself, who had been cured of sciatica by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I began taking the pills and soon was able to get out of bed. When I had taken six boxes I was able to work about the house and yard. I kept right on with the pills until I was cured and I have never had any return of the trouble. I have been running an engine ever since."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or sent postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

Which?

Three men, A, B and C, took a certain course. Each earnestly desired a large, rich, juicy, soul satisfying grade of A. Mr. A did his work faithfully and well each day throughout the year. Mr. B did not work, except before examinations, and then tutored. Mr. C. did not work at all, but told the instructor how much he enjoyed the course and how it had increased his insight into human nature. Which of these men pulled the large, rich, juicy, self-satisfying grade of A?—Harvard Lampoon.

TACK THIS UP.

Simple Advice Which May Prove of Untold Value.

At the first sign of Backache or pain in the region of the Kidneys, or weakness and Urinary trouble, the following simple prescription should be used:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Take a teaspoonful after each meal and at bedtime.

Any good prescription pharmacy will supply these three ingredients at small cost, which can easily be mixed by shaking well in a bottle. This is said to force the Kidneys to filter the sour acids and poisons from the blood, overcoming the worst cases of Rheumatism.

Didn't Work.

"I wonder why it is," remarked one of the two men who had just lunched, turning to speak to the other, "that they always have pretty cashiers at these restaurants."

FADED TO A SHADOW.

Worn Down by Five Years of Suffering from Kidney Complaint.

Mrs. Remethe Myers, of 180 South Tenth St., Ironton, O., says: "I have worked hard in my time and have been exposed again and again to changes of weather. It is no wonder my kidneys gave out and I went all to pieces at last. For five years I was fading away and finally so weak that for six months I could not get out of the house. I was nervous, restless and sleepless at night, and lame and sore in the morning. Sometimes everything would whirl and blur before me. I bloated so badly I could not wear tight clothing, and had to put on shoes two sizes larger than usual. The urine was disordered and passages were dreadfully frequent. I got help from the first box of Doan's Kidney Pills, however, and by the time I had taken four boxes the pain and bloating were gone. I have been in good health ever since."

"My three children had eczema for five months. A little sore would appear on the head and seemed very itchy, increasing day after day. For the first three months I took them to the N—Dispensary, but they did not seem to improve. HOW SHE MET HIM

INFORMAL INTRODUCTION OF MINISTER AND ORGANIST.

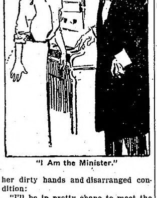
Couple Had Been Fellow Workers in More Ways Than One—Dignity for the Moment Sent to the Rear.

A few years ago a New England minister of much repute accepted a call to preach in a sedate little New England village. An official of the local factory entertained him, and in showing him about the town on Sunday morning dropped into church, just as the organist was getting ready for the morning service.

The factory official stopped at the door for a moment's conversation, and his guest wandered up toward the organ. The organist was in desperation. The church hour was rapidly approaching, and the instrument refused to work. She labored in excited haste to fix the obstinate notes, but to no purpose. Then the stranger offered his aid.

The organist had seen him some in with the factory official, and, supposing him to be a workman, quickly directed him what to do. For a quarter of an hour the stranger and the organist worked in the dust under the organ, until at length the notes sounded clear and strong.

The organist's thanks were few, for she noticed the rapidly-gathering congregation, and exclaimed as she noted her dirty hands and disarranged condition:



"I Am the Minister."

"I'll be in pretty shape to meet the minister!"

"Won't be very difficult!" the stranger remarked, as he slowly crawled from under the organ. "I am the minister!"

Why Rockwell Helped.

Ex-Congressman Francis W. Rockwell, of Pittsfield, Mass., is, perhaps, one of the most congenial men practicing before the Berkshire bar, and his friends tell many stories to illustrate his magnanimous spirit. A few years ago a little newsboy in Pittsfield found it impossible to collect 18 cents due from a customer, and as a hoax he was sent to Lawyer Rockwell by some friends of the congressman.

"Mr. Rockwell," he said in a straightforward way, "Mr. Soanso owes me 18 cents for papers and he won't pay me. I guess I'll have to get a lawyer and I want to retain you. Will you try to get my money?"

Smilingly Mr. Rockwell said he would, and a day or two later the boy received his 18 cents. In telling of the incident a little later, Mr. Rockwell said:

"I wrote a letter to that man and just shamed him into paying the lad. You know, I couldn't let that boy grow up believing that lawyers were just for rich men and corporations, as he surely would have if I hadn't agreed to be his 'attorney.' So that's why I helped him."

Valuable Fishing Lines.

"A fishing line worth $2,000?"

"Yes, sir."

"I don't believe it."

"It's the truth. It's a codfish line. It's one of those lines to which you owe your Sunday morning fishballs and your less appetizing but equally helpful codliver oil.

"These codfish lines, you see, are frequently eight miles long. They have 4,680 hooks. They'll often land 2,500 cod. No wonder they cost $2,000, eh?"

IN MIDDLE AGES.

So They Did.

A regiment of soldiers was recently drawn up one Sunday for church parade, but the church was being repaired and could only hold half of them.

"Sergeant-major," shouted the colonel, "tell all the men who don't want to go to church to fall out on the reverse flank."

A large number availed themselves of the privilege.

"Now, sergeant-major," said the colonel, "dismiss all the men who did not fall out, and march the others to church—they need it most."

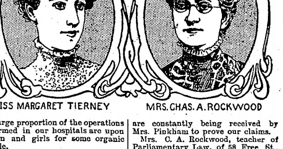
WOMEN IN HOSPITALS

Experiences of Mrs. Rockwood and Miss Tierney



MISS MARGARET TIERNEY MRS. CHAS. A. ROCKWOOD

A large proportion of the operations performed in our hospitals are upon women and girls for some organic trouble.

Why should this be the case?

Because they have neglected themselves, as every one of these patients in the hospital beds had plenty of warning in those dragging sensations, pains at left or right of abdomen, backaches, nervous exhaustion, inflammation, ulceration, displacements, and other organic weaknesses.

All of these symptoms are indications of an unhealthy condition of the female system and if not heeded the penalty has to be paid by a dangerous operation. When these symptoms manifest themselves, do not drag along until you are obliged to go to the hospital and submit to an operation—but remember that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, has saved hundreds of women from surgical operations.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, has cured more cases of feminine ills than any other one remedy. Such letters as the following are constantly being received by Mrs. Pinkham to prove our claims.

Mrs. C. A. Rockwood, teacher of Parliamentary Law, of 58 Free St., Fredonia, N. Y., writes:

"For years I suffered with female trouble. It was decided that an operation was necessary, and although I submitted to a serious operation my sufferings continued, until Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended and it proved a marvelous remedy, so quickly did it restore my health. I cannot thank you sufficiently for the good it has done me."

Miss Margaret Tierney, of No. 328 W. 25th Street, New York, writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"When only eighteen years of age our physician decided that an operation was necessary to permit of my womanly organs performing their natural functions. My mother objected and being urged by a relative to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did so. I soon improved in health, the proper conditions were established and I am well and strong, thanks to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

No other remedy has such unqualified endorsement as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. No other remedy in the world has such a record of cures of female ills.

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation to Women

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. From the symptoms given, the trouble may be located and the quickest and surest way of recovery advised. Out of her vast volume of experience in treating female ills Mrs. Pinkham probably has the very knowledge that may help your case. Her advice is free and always helpful.

BAD BLOOD
THE SOURCE OF ALL DISEASE

Every part of the body is dependent on the blood for nourishment and strength. When this life stream is flowing through the system in a state of purity and richness we are assured of perfect and uninterrupted health; because pure blood is nature's safe-guard against disease. When, however, the body is fed on weak, impure or polluted blood, the system is deprived of its strength, disease germs collect, and the trouble is manifested in various ways. Pustular eruptions, pimples, rashes and the different skin affections show that the blood is in a feverish and diseased condition as a result of too much acid or the presence of some irritating humor. Sores and Ulcers are the result of morbid, unhealthy matter in the blood, and Rheumatism, Catarrh, Scrofula, Contagious Blood Poison, etc., are all deep-seated blood disorders that will continue to grow worse as long as the poison remains. These impurities and poisons find their way into the blood in various ways. Often a sluggish, inactive condition of the system, and torpid state of the avenues of bodily waste, leaves the refuse and waste matters to sour and form uric and other acids, which are taken up by the blood and distributed throughout the circulation. Coming in contact with contagious diseases is another cause for the poisoning of the blood; we also breathe the germs and microbes of Malaria into our lungs, and when these get into the blood in sufficient quantity it becomes a carrier of disease instead of health. Some are so unfortunate as to inherit bad blood, perhaps the dregs of some old constitutional disease of ancestors is handed down to them and they are constantly annoyed and troubled with it. Bad blood is the source of all disease, and until this vital fluid is cleansed and purified the body is sure to suffer in some way. For blood troubles of any character S. S. S. is the best remedy ever discovered. It goes down into the circulation and removes any and all poisons, supplies the healthful properties it needs, and completely and permanently cures blood diseases of every kind. The action of S. S. S. is so thorough that hereditary taints are removed and weak, diseased blood made strong and healthy so that disease cannot remain. It cures Rheumatism, Catarrh, Scrofula, Sores and Ulcers, Skin Diseases, Contagious Blood Poison, etc., and does not leave the slightest trace of the trouble for future outbreaks. The whole volume of blood is renewed and cleansed after a course of S. S. S. It is also nature's greatest tonic, made entirely of roots, herbs and barks, and is absolutely harmless to any part of the system. S. S. S. is for sale at all first class drug stores. CLASS PLAY OF '07

The Sweet Girl Graduate Will Make Her Debute In The Glare of The Footlights.

The sweet girl graduate is not only the embryo of expectancy and many future hopes, but has found her way into the field of romance to the extent that she has commanded the attention of the playwright, and, H. Rea Woodman, charmed by her many little whims and caprices, has embodied her several moods in a delightful little farce comedy entitled "The Sweet Girl Graduates," which will be presented to the people of Red Lake Falls by the High School Class of '07, at the Metropolitan Opera House on the evening of April 12th two weeks from tomorrow (Friday.)

The play, which is composed of three acts and an epilogue, is replete with many little scenes abounding with comedy and satire, sombered by the deep earnestness with which plans are laid for the great and unknown future, and suggest to the play goer days gone by when they too were about to go go fourth into an untutored and unsuspecting world.

The Class of '07 have had the play in hand for some two weeks past, and at rehearsals now being held, promise to give a first-class reproduction of the "Sweet Girl Graduate as depicted by the author, whose portrayal of life is decidedly typical.

Many specialties will be interwoven with the play and an effort is being made to have a full orchestra in attendance, so that there will not be an idle moment during the entire program. In the afternoon of April 12th, the class will give a matinee for the benefit of the children who would be unable to attend in the evening, thereby giving all who desire, a chance to witness the "Sweet Girl Graduate" as she is about to enter an unexplored world filled with the hope of youth and many plans for the future.

The cast of the play is as follows:

Miss Mande De Smythe, the Sweet Girl, Secretary of the Class of '07.
—Alice Ericson.

Mrs. DeSmythe, her mother, who is threatened with neverous prostration.
—Lucy Hunt.

Mr. De Smythe, her father, President of the R. I. P. Railroad.

Catarrh

To prove unquestionably, and beyond any doubt, that Catarrh of the nose and throat can be cured, I am furnishing patients through druggists, small free Trial Boxes of Dr. Shoop's Catarrh Cure. I do this because I am so certain, that Dr. Shoop's Catarrh Cure will bring actual substantial help. Nothing certainly, is so convincing as a physical test of any article of real, genuine merit. But that article must possess true merit, else the test will condemn, rather than advance it. Dr. Shoop's Catarrh Cure is a snow white, healing antiseptic balm, put up in beautiful nickel capped glass jars at 50c. Such soothing agents as Oil Eucalyptus, Thymol, Menthol, etc., are incorporated into a velvety, cream like Petrolatum, imported by Dr. Shoop from Europe. If Catarrh of the nose and throat has extended to the stomach, then by all means also use internally, Dr. Shoop's Restorative. Stomach distress, a lack of general strength, bloating, belching, biliousness, bad taste, etc. surely call for Dr. Shoop's Restorative.

For uncomplicated catarrh only of the nose and throat nothing else, however, need be used but

HAMILTON CLEARED OF CHARGE OF RAPE

Jury Brings In Verdict of "Not Guilty" After Several Hours' Deliberation.

Detendent Has Still Another Charge to Answer tor—Case Postponed Until Fall.

R. B. Hamilton, of Thief River Falls, was cleared of the charge of rape by the jury in the case late last Friday night, after the "twelve good men, and true" had deliberated for seven or eight hours.

The testimony was all in at noon on Friday, and after the arguments of the attorneys and the charge of the judge the case went to the jury at about four o'clock. At about eleven o'clock the same night word was sent the judge and clerk that a verdict had been reached, and on the re-opening of court the jury returned their findings which were "not guilty."

Hamilton has still the indictment of indecent assault to face, but on motion of his attorneys the case was put over until the fall term, and bail set at $1,000, which was promptly furnished. Hamilton and his wife left Saturday evening for Crookston and returned to Thief River Falls via Erskine and the Soo.

The case was stubbornly contested on both sides, but the jury evidently opined that he evidence was not enough to constitute a case of rape.

County Attorney Germo conducted the state's case, and Messrs. Grady, of this city, and Mabey of Thief River Falls, the case for the defense.

PLAY IS POSTPONED.

Will Not Be Given Until Friday of Next Week.

The class play of the class of '07—"Sweet Girl Graduates"—which was advertised for Friday evening of this week, has been postponed one week and will be given next Friday evening, the 19th inst.

Several unforseen circumstances arising prevented the play being given on th date originally announced, but the fact of the week's delay will, if such a thing is possible, improve the entertainment greatly, as the class will have additional time to add greater polish to the parts.

The play is said to be one of the best productions ever attempted by a high school class, and the young people are deserving of an excellent patronage next Friday evening.

COURT ADJOURNS UNTIL JULY NINTH

March Term of Distritct Winds Up Its Business Last Saturday Morning.

After Nearly Two Weeks' Session the Court Gets Through With the Calendar,

The March term of the district court for Red Lake county adjourned last Saturday morning after having spent two weeks in trying the cases on the calendar for the term, and disposing of other matters.

The Hamilton case was the only one tried last week, the taking of the evidence, etc., requiring over two days, and with its completion the judge announced that an adjournment would be taken until July 9. At the July session several residents will be granted final citizenship papers under the new law, and it is possible that one or two cases will be tried.

The case of the State vs. Blakey, indicted for bribery, will not be brought up until the November term.

THE REAPER'S WORK.

Miss Kathryn Cushing Succombs to Attack of Consumption.

Kathryn Winnifred Cushing passed away at the home of her sister, Mrs. E. W. Chamberlain, in this city, early last Saturday morning, after an illness over a year with consumption.

Miss Cushing was for five years one of the head nurses in the state hospital at St. Peter and during the last year of her work a great many tubercular patients were cared for. Prior to January of last year Miss Cushing had enjoyed good health, and it was thought that her disease was contracted by direct malignant infection, which made it far worse to combat. She came here from her home at Tracy last August, and for a few months after she arrived her improvement seemed especially rapid. She gained in weight and felt greatly strengthened, and hopes were entertained that she would recover. However at Christmas time she contracted bad attack of the grippe and from then on her decline was rapid, although she was obliged to remain in bed but two days during the last two months of her sickness. Death was very easy and the reaper found its victim fully resigned to the fate that awaited her.

Her sister, Miss Elizabeth Cushing, was with her during the last week, and kind friends did all in their power to make her last days more cheerful. Deceased was just twenty-four years and six months old at the time of her death, and died as she had lived, a true Christian spirit. Her life was an open book, and was filled with kind words and deeds for the needy and unfortunate. It is sad, indeed, to think of a life being cut off while it is just really starting but to those that have faith in what is to come, Kathryn Cushing has found a more beautiful home than we on earth can hope for here. The funersl services were held from the Chamberlain home Saturday afternoon, and a large crowd of friends attended. The music provided for the occasion was especially beautiful, and was a pretty final tribute to the one in whose memory it was provided. The remains were shipped to New Ulm, Brown county, Saturday evening where they were interred in the congregational cemetery. Mrs. Chamberlain and Miss Elizebeth Cushing accompanied them on the final journey to the last place of rest. The family has the sincere sympathy of the people of Red Lake Falls in their bereavement.

Card of Thanks.

To the friends of our departed sister, who with their thoughtful attention and kindly sympathy made her last days more pleasant, and who aided us in the performance of the last sad rites, we extend our heartfelt thanks.—Elizabeth R. Cushing, Mrs. E. W. Chamberlain, E. W. Chamberlain.

PROFESSOR SKIDOOED.

He Didn't Say Good Bye—But Just Went.

Prof. E. H. Bruckman, who has conducted the band here for several months past, did the Arab act to perfection Monday evening, and for a while the band will again be without a regular leader although Manager Tracy has several good ones on the string and will get one just as soon as possible.

Prof. Bruckman seemed well pleased with conditions here, and never hinted that he intended to leave, and the news of his departure was naturally a surprise to the people. It is said that he went to Duluth, where he had been offered a situation with a big orchestra.

Mr. Bruckman was a peculiar character, and while he was a very fair band leader, his departure will not cause any great sorrow among those who knew him best.

NOTICE.

LOCAL POSTOFFICE SHOWS NICE GAIN

Receipts For Past Year Nearly $1,000 More Than In the Year Previous.

Despite All Talk To The Contrary Red Lake Falls Is Making Steady Progress.

Postmistress E. F. Marshall has received the report of the business done at the local postoffice for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1907, and the gain made is a highly satisfactory one to the postoffice people.

For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1907 the receipts were $4739.21, as against $3809.81 for the year previous, a gain of exactly $929.40 in the past year.

This is a very satisfactory growth, and shows conclusively that the volume of business Red Lake Falls has increased nicely during the past year.

The year previous the city was at the low ebb of its history and the postoffice receipts showed it. During the past year the city has been picking up very nicely, and the coming summer will see still greater advancement here. The postoffice receipts act as a good barometer of local conditions, and every business man and resident has reason to feel good over the handsome increase made.

Put your shoulder to the wheel, and help Red Lake Falls grow.

HARRIMAN SLAPS AT THE PRESIDENT

ACCUSED ROOSEVELT IN LETTER OF ASKING FOR $250,000 FOR CAMPAIGN.

PRESIDENT MAKES DENIAL

CHARACTERIZES CHARGE AS DELIBERATE AND WILLFUL UNTRUTH.

New York, April 4.—What is ostensibly a private letter from E. H. Harriman to Sidney Webster of New York, embodying serious implied charges of bad faith against President Roosevelt, was made public here yesterday. Reduced to plain terms, the letter charges that just before the election of 1904 the president asked Harriman to raise a big fund particularly to help the Republican party in New York; that Harriman undertook the task with the distinct understanding that Depew was to be disposed of by naming him ambassador to Paris, and that later the president repudiated any agreement or understanding to this effect. It is also insinuated that there were contributions from insurance companies in the fund raised by Harriman, and that the president must have known this fact.

Mr. Harriman protested vehemently against the publication of this letter, threatening to prosecute any New York paper which used it.

President Enters Denial.

Washington, April 4. — The president was prompt to enter a denial of the charges made in the Harriman letter to Webster. He issued a lengthy statement, in which he made public letters written to Representative Sherman of New York during the campaign of 1906. Every point made in the Harriman letter is covered in minute detail. Sherman, during the 1906 campaign, had repeated to the president the Harriman charges, whereupon the president wrote the letter made public yesterday. The charge that he had asked Harriman to raise $250,000 to be used in carrying New York for the Republican party in the election of 1904, the president characterizes in his letter to Sherman as "a deliberate and Willful Untruth.

By right it should be characterized by an even shorter and more ugly word. I never requested Mr. Harriman to raise a dollar for the presidential campaign of 1904."

The president's reply is believed to be stronger, as a letter to Sherman, bearing date of last October, than if prepared to-day in consequence of the Harriman charges.

The president showed how he regards the whole matter by saying to a group of newspaper men yesterday, when he gave out the reply denying Harriman's charges:

"I feet particularly fortunate in having been attacked within the last few days by both Former Senator Burton of Kansas and Mr. Harriman."

BUSSE IS MAYOR OF CHICAGO.

Defeats Dunne by Safe Majority—Settles Street Car Question.

Chicago, April 4. — Chicago's post master, Frederick A. Busse, the Republican candidate, was elected mayor of the city yesterday, having a plurality of 13,121 votes over Mayor Edward Dunne. The total number of votes cast for Mr. Busse were 164,839, and for Mr. Dunne 151,718. The Prohibition candidate polled 5,875 and the Socialists 13,159. Two years ago, when Mayor Dunne was elected to office he polled 163,189 votes, and John M. Harlan, the Republican candidate 138,671. The Socialist vote the same year was over 40,000, and yesterday's vote was a great disappointment to the leaders of that party.

The new mayor will have the city council with him, but it is very close, as the makeup of this body shows 35 Republicans, 34 Democrats and 1 Independent Democrat.

The ordinances settling the street car question were carried by a good majority. The total vote on this question was 165,846 for and 132,720 against.

WILL REPORT 2-CENT BILL

JOINT LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE REJECTS PROPOSALS OF RAILROADS.

St. Paul, April 3.—There will be no compromise on the 2-cent passenger fare proposition recommended by the legislative conference committee, but instead the committee will report a 2-cent rate bill to-day. Efforts to effect a compromise on the whole rate question, both passenger and freight, in consideration of the reconsideration in the senate and house of the vote on the passage of the 2-cent passenger fare bills and the substitution of a 2 1-2 cent fare bill were not successful, so far as the conference committee and the railroad and warehouse commission are concerned.

Proposals Are Disappointing.

The proposals of the railroads upon which the compromise was to be made were received by the committee and the commission last evening. The terms of the proposed compromise did not come up to the expectations of the committee, and, while the committee will have performed its full duty when it transmits the offer to the legislature to-day the committee will in effect report against the compromise by reporting in a bill providing for a 2-cent passenger rate.

Report 2-cent Bill.

The bill will be short, providing for a maximum 2-cent rate, with stringent penalties for violation.

The offer received by the committee yesterday provided for a maximum 2 1-2 cent passenger rate, with 2,000-mile books as now issued and a 500-family mileage book, to be sold for $10. The expected offer of a 2-cent rate for all return trip tickets did not materialize.

On Commodity Rates.

The proposed concessions in freight rates also disappointed the committee. The concession in the commodity rates, in which a cut of about 17 1-2 per cent on the average recently was ordered by the railroad commission, was about 50 per cent of this cut. The rates ordered by the commission are held in abeyance pending the settlement of litigation pending in the courts.

THAW DECLARED SANE BY BOARD

REPORT TO COURT OF COMMISSION IN LUNACY IS UNANIMOUS.

WILL TRY TO STOP THE TRIAL

JEROME TO ASK THE SUPREME COURT TO PREVENT CONTINUANCE OF TRIAL.

New York, April 6. — Harry K. Thaw yesterday was declared sane by the unanimous report of the commission in lunacy. The moment the decision was handed down from Justice Fitzgerald's desk District Attorney Jerome was on his feet vigorously protesting against its confirmation by the court. He charged that he had been excluded from the last session of the commission, and demanded to be allowed to have access to the minutes and stenographic notes of what transpired at the final mental and physical examination of the defendant.

Will Try to Stop Trial.

When Justice Fitzgerald declined to turn the minutes over to the district attorney Mr. Jerome declared he would carry the case to the appellate division of the supreme court, asking that a writ of prohibition or mandamus be granted to prevent a continuance of the Thaw trial until the higher court had ruled upon the legality of the commission's course.

Justice Fitzgerald reminded Mr. Jerome that he had waived the statutory right of attending the last session of the commission by suggesting himself that all the attorneys be excluded from the sitting in question. He then granted the district attorney an adjournment until Monday morning next in order that he might have time to prepare his application to the appellate division.

Jerome Turned Down.

Mr. Jerome protested that the time was not sufficient, but Justice Fitzgerald cut him short with the announcement that the trial must be concluded forthwith.

Unless Mr. Jerome should secure a writ of prohibition in the meantime, Justice Fitzgerald is expected to announce on Monday morning that he has confirmed the report of the commission and order that the trial proceed without further delay.

The news of the commission's unanimous verdict as to his present sanity was carried to Thaw in the prisoner's cell at the penitentiary. He expressed satisfaction, but not surprise. He declared that he felt especially lucky because it was the second anniversary of his marriage.

Jerome Will Appeal.

After an examination of authorities and a study of facts involved, that continued from the hour that court adjourned, District Attorney Jerome late last night determined to ask the higher court to review the action of Judge Fitzgerald, who refused to give the prosecutor access to the minutes of the lunacy commission.

DEFENDS THE ALTON DEAL

HARRIMAN'S ATTORNEYS BEGIN ARGUMENT IN WASHINGTON.

Washington, April 6.—Argument in the matter of E. H. Harriman's railroad transactions was begun before the interstate commerce commission yesterday.

The first of the series of addresses was made by Attorney Paul D. Cravath, who represented not only Mr. Harriman, but also Kuhn, Loeb & Co., and he was followed in the order named by Judge R. S. Lovett and John G. Milburn. The interstate commerce commission is represented by its special attorneys, Frank B. Kellogg and C. A. Severance. Mr. Cravath dealt especially with the Chicago & Alton recapitalization, while Mr. Lovett devoted most of his attention to the attack upon the consolidation of the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific roads, which was brought about largely through Mr. Harriman's instrumentality. Mr. Milburn had not concluded when the commission adjourned, but so far as he went he dealt with the union of the two Pacific roads.

Mr. Cravath contended that the Chicago & Alton transaction had been misunderstood by both the commission and the public, and he declared that the proceedings there followed was not unusual in financial transactions.

Mileage books are to be sold at 2 cents a mile, giving the public practically a 2-cent rate in this state. The report reviewed the work of the committee, the various meetings held and the action taken at each, including the offer of a compromise received from the railroads. It wound up by recommending the 2-cent bill. The report contained the proposals which the committee had been given to understand would be made and the written proposals received Monday. As the proposal received was not what was expected the committee reported that it could not recommend acceptance and in the same sentence recommended the passage of the 2-cent rate bill.

The bill permitting counties to issue bonds in payment of heating plants was passed under suspension of the rules.

The bill giving rural electric lines the right of eminent domain was reported out for passage.

Fourteen bills were passed by the house yesterday, but except those already mentioned none were of more than local interest.

ICE GORGE FORMS AT ROYALTON.

Danger That Bridge Across the Mississippi Will Be Carried Out.

Royalton, April 4.—There is danger that the big bridge across the Mississippi here will be carried out. An ice gorge is formed above the bridge, and as the gorge is two miles long and the ice is piled up twenty feet it is feared that the bridge cannot long stand the pressure. Men are at work dynamiting the gorge, but so far they have been unable to dislodge it.

MANSFIELD WILL RECOVER.

Noted Actor Pronounced Much Improved by Physicians.

New York, April 4.—Richard Mansfield, the actor who is ill at his home, 316 Riverside drive, is said to be in a much improved condition. It is further said that his condition has never been such as to cause any serious alarm as to his ultimate recovery, but owing to the actor's temper and nervous condition his recovery will be slow.

The letters will be sent out for circulation among the medical fraternity of the United States and Canada.

GOV. JOHNSON TAKES CONTROL.

Commissioners Turn Over the New Capitol.

The state board of capitol commissioners Saturday turned over the care of the new capitol to Gov. Johnson, in accordance with a law passed by the legislature two years ago, under which the commission was intrusted with the care and maintenance of the building until April 1, 1907. The commission, however, will not pass into history just yet, as there are still a few things to be done about the building before it is completed.

From now on the governor will have the appointing of the capitol employes, but owing to the pressure of business due to the session of the legislature he states that there will be no immediate changes, and probably none until after the session closes. It is possible, however, that before that time a custodian or superintendent of the building will be appointed, and the person most prominently mentioned for this position is Thomas Downs of Minneapolis, sergeant-at-arms of the senate for several sessions.

While the number of employes in the capitol varies, being larger in the winter than in the summer, the average number is about forty-nine, not including the scrubwomen, of whom there are generally three to five. The monthly pay roll of these employes amounts to about $3,400. Added to these figures will be the superintendent and possibly an assistant, with their salaries. The position of superintendent is now held by Secretary Frank E. Hanson of the capitol commission.

One of the important features of the capitol, which has delayed the turning over of the building by the commission, is the quadriga over the main entrance. This has been housed for several months while the workmen have been gilding the figures. The work is now about completed and the house will be removed in a few days, revealing the quadriga in its finished state. The last of the pictures for the governor's reception room was hung a few days ago and there remain but a few minor details before the building can be considered entirely finished, when the commission will make its final report and pass out of existence after a career of fourteen years.

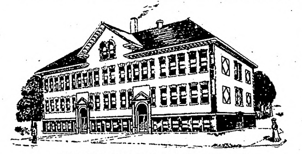
FUND FOR A SANATORIUM.

Provision for Maintaining Institution Near Walker.

A request will be made to the legislature at this session for the creation of a revolving fund of $50,000 to be used for the maintenance of the state sanatorium for consumptives near Walker. It is the expectation that the home will be self-supporting, but as it cannot possibly be so from the start this fund is desired by the board of control in order that the maintenance may be provided for as soon as the home is ready for occupancy, which will be next summer.

One wing of the main building is now nearing completion and the caretaker, Ole A. Larson, has cleared about twenty-five acres upon which the cottages will be constructed and built a road leading to the main building. The location is in the midst of a forest of young pine, with an exceedingly heavy underbrush, which is being cleared away. The home will be under the management of Dr. Walter J. Marclay, who has been superintendent of the Massachusetts sanatorium for consumptives, at Rutland.

The reports for that institution show that the average cost per capita for the inmate is $9.23 a week, and if the price for maintaining patients at the Walker home is fixed at $1 a day, as has been suggested, it will be seen that some fund must be available at the beginning for the maintenance, and it may possibly have to be made permanent, although the cost per capita may be less in this state than in the East, owing to the lower price on butter, eggs and farm produce. The per capita cost at such institutions is higher than at most state institutions, owing to the fact that the food prepared for the patients must be of the very best order to tempt the appetites of the invalids.



NEW HIGH SCHOOL AT ELBOW LAKE, MINN.

The new Elbow Lake high school will cost $30,000 complete. It is 130x60 feet in dimensions and is built of pressed brick. The finish throughout will be birch. An agricultural department is contained in the building, and next year a green house will be added in order to facilitate agricultural work and botanical study.

SUPPLIES FOR STATE.

Things Needed for the Next Quarter Amount to $171,500.

The state board of control has just approved the estimates for supplies for the twelve institutions under its jurisdiction for May, June and July, amounting in the aggregate to $171,500. The estimates include all of the supplies of every nature which will be needed at the institutions so far as they can be known in advance.

The estimates are prepared by the superintendents of the institutions a month in advance of the quarter for which the supplies are needed. The items are tabulated in their classes by the board and submitted to the dealers for bids. The making of these estimate sheets to be submitted to the bidders is a big task, the schedules when completed including 20,000 to 25,000 sheets of legal cap paper.

In some of the lines, such as hardware, samples of the supplies are submitted and a meeting of the superintendents is held for the purpose of selecting the supplies best adapted to the purposes for which they are wanted at the institutions. These samples are kept for six months and then returned to the bidders.

The aggregate amount of the estimates for the next quarter is lower than for the average quarter, due to the fact that the foodstuffs needed for the institution is reduced by the products of the farms maintained in connection with the institutions.

NO WEDDINGS IN 28 DAYS.

If the records in the office of the clerk of the courts may be taken as a criterion, the old question, "Is marriage a failure?" may be answered in the affirmative, in Crow Wing county, at least. During the present month the records show that not a single marriage license has been issued, while five couples have been legally separated. It is said that this remarkable showing never before has been even approached in the history of the county.

American Homestead.

Brown—See that farm house, old man? That's the old homestead—the place where I first saw the light of day.

Gray—Which one? That villa advertising Dr. Fierce's Pink Prescription, or the bungalow to the right booming Snitcher's Gastoria?—Puck.

PLANS GOOD ROADS WORK.

Steele Couty Men Hold Enthusiastic Meeting.

The Steele County Good Roads association convention was held last week at the court house at Owatonna. The attendance was over 300.

The feature of the discussions in all cases was the general advocacy of the use of the "split log" drag in smoothing the roads. Its use was warmly indorsed by farmers who have tried the experiment, and by the local street commissioner, who has been using it on the streets of Owatonna with great success. The road leading from this city to Faribault is generally conceded to be one of the best stretches of country road in the southern part of the state.

Local autoists have taken up the cause of good roads energetically, and have considerable influence in inducing the commissioners to do their part in the building of the roads. Another convention will be held soon and regular work will be outlined for each section of the county.

OLD CLAIM COMES TO LIGHT.

School District Asked to Pay for Charts Bought Seven Years Ago.

The Bank of Arlington has just lately made a demand on the officers of school districts Nos. 8 and 5 Sibley county, for the payment of an account against each district in the sum of $37 for a chart sold and delivered to each district seven years ago, and interest for seven years is demanded on the accounts. This is the first demand ever made on the districts for the money and the first time they have ever known where payment might be made. Both the claims, although conceded to have been originally valid, are now outlawed and uncollectable, but the districts are willing to and will pay the principal, but will not pay the interest. The officers are wondering where the old claims have been sleeping so long.

CASE STILL UNSETTLED.

Suits May Yet Be Started in Widell-Finley Affair.

The affairs of the Widell-Finley company of Mankato, bankrupt, are being slowly untangled. The Chicago & North-Western road has just paid over to Trustee Volk the balance due after the completion of the company's contracts. Judge Lochren has ordered the Illinois Central road to pay over the balance that it is holding back by April 10, or show cause why it does not do so.

An action has been started in the United States court in Illinois against the Big Four system to secure the balance due from it. When these matters have been disposed of, there will only remain the government contract at Belle Fourche, S. D., to be attended to. This is badly involved, and the trustee expects to begin suit against the government in the United State court in this city for an accounting.

TONIC FOR MOTHERS

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Are Safe and Reliable—A Favorite Household Remedy.

Motherhood may be the crowning blessing of a woman's life or it may bring grief and sorrow. Mrs. M. J. Wight, of 170 Seventh Street, Auburn, Maine, relates her experience after the birth of her daughter in 1901, as follows: "I was all run down at the time the baby came and did not improve in health rapidly after. I was pale, thin and bloodless. My stomach distressed me being full of gas all the time and my heart fluttered so that I could scarcely breathe.

"Finally I remembered that a friend had recommended Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to me so I commenced using them. I gained in strength rapidly while the baby throve also. When I expected my next child I started taking the pills again as a tonic and strengthener and had no such difficulty as before. I got up better and my strength came back much sooner.

"A year ago last winter I had an attack of rheumatism in the hands which went from one hand to the other. The joints swelled up and were so stiff I could not move them. The pain extended up through my arms and shoulders. I felt sick enough to go to bed but did not do so. This attack lasted for several months. I tried several remedies but finally came back to using the pills which had done me so much good before and found that they benefited me almost at once. I have not been troubled since."

All druggists sell Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, or they will be sent by mail post-paid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y. Send for book of cures.

TARRED ROADS IN ENGLAND.

Process Simple and Results Declared to Be Highly Satisfactory.

The road is first thoroughly cleaned by dry sweeping, then roughly distilled tar is poured over it and spread evenly, after which sand is thrown on and the road is immediately ready for traffic. A fortnight or three weeks later a second coating is applied, and in a short time the road has the appearance of an asphalt street. It appears also that a short stretch of road in Beckenham was treated with tar oil, which is poured over again until the pores of the road exude the preparation.

This tar oil, however, dries up quickly, does not make an oily and nasty mess in wet weather and is said to be much cheaper than the tar process, but it requires more frequent renewal. A comparatively small quantity of the material is available, and this is a difficulty in the way of its general adoption. The Beckenham district council is spending about $9,000 in laying down two short stretches with the most up-to-date tar macadam.

A FRIENDLY GROCER.

Dropped a Valuable Hint About Coffee.

"For about eight years," writes a Mich. woman, "I suffered from nervousness—part of the time down in bed with nervous prostration.

"Sometimes I would get numb and it would be almost impossible for me to speak for a spell. At others, I would have severe bilious attacks, and my heart would flutter painfully when I would walk fast or sweep.

"I have taken enough medicine to start a small drug store, without any benefit. One evening our grocer was asking husband how I was and he urged that I quit coffee and use Postum, so he brought home a pkg. and I made it according to directions and we were both delighted with it.

"So we quit coffee altogether and used only Postum. I began to get better in a month's time and look like another person, the color came back to my cheeks, I began to sleep well, my appetite was good and I commenced to take on flesh and become interested in everything about the house.

"Finally I was able to do all my own work without the least sign of my old trouble. I am so thankful for the little book, 'The Road to Wellville.' It has done me so much good. I haven't taken medicine of any kind for six months and don't need any.

"A friend of ours who did not like Postum as she made it, liked mine, and when she learned to boil it long enough, her's was as good as mine. It's easy if you follow directions." Name given by Postum Company, Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

OFFICIAL PAPER RED LAKE COUNTY
OFFICIAL PAPER RED LAKE FALLS CITY

$1.00 Per Year in Advance

THIS IS A "SQUARE DEAL."

The intelligent voter can find in every issue of the Thief River Falls papers of late a fair sample of the "square deal" the bunch up stream is always shouting, and the latest instance is but one of the many lies concocted by the "holier than thou" gang for the purpose of placing Red Lake Falls in a bad light with the people throughout the county.

In last week's Thief River News an item appears to the effect that Red Lake Falls people last week endeavored to have the court house and jail condemned by the grand jury, in order that the county would be obliged to build new buildings.

The item was in every respect created in the imaginative brain of some enthusiastic Thief Riverite, and repeated by parrot Eastman in hopes that the people might think that Red Lake Falls entertained such a plan. Ashamed to give it the usual scare-head prominence accorded the attacks against Red Lake Falls, the News editor placed this item among the local stuff, but the intention was nevertheless to have the people see it, in the hopes that it would harm Red Lake Falls. THE COURIER has interviewed no less than seven members of the late grand jury, and all are positive in their denunciation of the article in the News, stating that no person from Red Lake Falls appeared before the jury for that purpose or on other matter whatsoever.

The News wanted to offset the stories afloat as to the attempts to have the grand jury indict the Thief River mayor and several others up there—which was tried by residents of Thief River Falls—and it could see no better way than to concoct a lie that it hoped would prove harmful to Red Lake Falls.

The public is every day getting striking examples of Thief River's fair play, and it seems decidedly strange that any one can have the least faith in the fellows who are responsible for such dirty deals as this one was.

A. M. WELLES has purchased the Sauk Centre Herald of Frank M. Eddy and assumes possession this week.

JACK EASTMAN'S article—signed by P. Engelstad—contained one truth at least. It called the whole deal a "county seat comedy." To the average citizen it does resemble a comedy—and from all appearances the curtain has been rung down on the last act, with the audience enjoying a good laugh at the expense of the much "indicted" town up the creek.

Wanted—200 cords green poplar, oak, or elm. See Al. Roy.

A MAN who has been spending the winter in Florida relates the following: "A number of my friends hired a couple of darkies to row them to to an inlet on the coast that they might take a swim. After they had plunged in, one of them turned to the oarsman and cried, "Are you sure, Ebeneezer, that there are no alligators here?" 'Dead sure, boss,' was the answer. 'You wouldn't catch one of dem 'gators coming within a mile of this place" '"Why not?" 'Because 'gators so fraid of de sharks.' The rest of the bath was taken at their hotel."

PETER ENGELSTAD, one of Rocksbury's prominent leaders, is again used as a cat's-paw by the Thief River Falls hoodwinkers, and in last week's papers a communication appears signed by him, bearing on the stolen county seat petition. Every time Thief River gets a chance, Engelstad is used as a decoy to make the farmers believe some of the slush the up-river bunch is handing the public. The COURIER is sorry for Engelstad—inasmuch as it does not think for an instant that he believes any part of the things that appear in the article some unscrupulous Thief Riverite got him to sign. He will wake up to the fact some day that he is being made the victim of a set of smooth shysters, who always have a row of axes to grind.

JACK EASTMAN is troubled because the Red Lake Falls papers don't get all the news. If Jack is so ambitious in the news line why didn't he tell his readers last week about how prominent citizens of his inflated burg tried to have the grand jury indict the mayor and several other people from Thief River Falls. The News runs a scare-head over the fake story about Red Lake Falls stealing the county seat petition but he forgot this other more important item entirely. Whether it is true or not Jack never fails to publish some rotten story about Red Lake Falls, but forgets to notice any of the real news of his home town. However if the News attempted to publish all of the indictments, robberies, brawls and other troubles of the north end baliwick, the paper would be so full that he wouldn't have any space left to save the country with.

EXCHANGE ECHOES.

Hibbing Tribune: Democrats every where read the announcement of Joseph B. Foraker's candidacy for presidency with the liveliest satisfaction. Who wouldn't rather vote for John A. Johnson?

Winona Independent: From the number of gratuitous suggestions flowing from Mr. E. H. Harriman and Mr. J. J. Hill these days one might suppose that the railway business was to be "revised by its friends."

Red Wing Republican: It surety must be a proof of true love when an ardent lover purchases a diamond ring on the installment plan on a salary of $12 a week.

Owatonna Journal-Chronicle: Minneapolis barbers have raised the price of haircuts to 35 cents. Another argument for the Owatonna people not to send away for their haircuts.

Brainerd Tribune: Money invested in Northern Minnesota farming lands at the present low prices is bound to yield a handsome returne in the future.

Morris Sun: The roads in this county are for the most part in bad condition, and all the villages and towns, and farmers themselves would be better off could they be improved so as to make it possible to travel in all kinds of weather.

WESLEY IS CONVICTED.

Jury Returns Verdict of Murder In The First Degree.

James Wesley, tried for the murder of N. O. Dahl and daughter, Aagot, near Quiring some three years ago, has been found guilty of murder in the first degree, the jury in the case only being out about twenty minutes at Bemidji last Friday.

The case was stubbornly fought on both sides, but the state had several witnesses whose testimony could not be broken down, and a very strong case was put up against Wesley,

The Dahl murder occured in the winter of 1904, and the circumstances are familiar to most COURIER readers.

Paul Fournier, accused of being implicated with Wesley, is now being tried, and the state is making a very strong case against him. Several witnesses have testified that Fournier told of the killing of the Dahls by himself and Wesley, and it seems that he will be found guilty also.

Sentence has not been passed upon Wesley, but in case Fournier is convicted it is likely that both will be given a life sentence.

Sent to Training School.

Sheriff Nelson was called to Thief River Falls Monday to conduct a young son of H. Ewert, of that place, to Warren, where he was taken before Judge Grindeland and sentenced to the state training school at Red Wing. The sheriff took him to that place Tuesday evening. The young fellow was a bad one, and his parents and the police could do nothing with him, and it was deemed best to put him where he would be kept in strict discipline for a few years. The example that has been set the youngsters of Thief River Falls by the "older heads" has been sufficient of late to cause a lot of them to go wrong, and that only one turned out bad as a result speaks well for the "kids."

A Pleasant Party.

About seventy-five ladies assembled at the I.O.O.F. hall last Friday afternoon as bidden guests of Mesdames Theo. LaBissoniere, Wm. Findeisen and J. P. Harren, and as might be expected with such noted entertainers as these doing the honors, the affair was a delightfully enjoyable one to all. The amusements of the day consisted of two contests, one a hat making contest in which fantastic articles of feminine headgear were to be made from red tissue paper—and the other a cake contest, in which a long row of questions were to be answered with the name of a cake. In the hat making contest, Mrs. Chas. E. Boughton proved her superiority as a designer of hats, and was awarded the prize—a handsome hatpin. Several of the samples of hats submitted put this season's creations several lengths in the shade, and could they have been saved might have brought a good figure in the Paris model stores. In the cake contest, Mrs. E. F. Marshall and Miss Elene Hanson tied for first honors, and on the draw Miss Hanson was dealared the winner of the prize—a delicious decorated angel food cake, which was surely worth winning. Refreshments consisting of ice cream, wafers, salads, assorted cake and coffee were served, and this part of the entertainment was in excellent accord with the entire affair. The party broke up in time to let the ladies get home before their husbands arrived for supper, but they all avowed that they had enjoyed such a splendid time that they would have willingly let the "old men" go hungry an hour or so sooner than have missed it.

Lands Withdrawn Last Fall Can Now be Filed Upon

Under date of April 3, Register Montague sends out the following notice: "Prior to November 10th, 1906, certain lands, including the ceded Chippewa and Red Lake lands in this district, were open to settlement and entry. On that day an order was issued, withdrawing such lands from settlement and entry. That order has been rescinded and all lands subject to entry prior to November 10th, 1906, are now subject to entry, the only difference being that in the receipt by this office the reservation will be made providing the lands may be subject to taxation for right-of-way and cost of draining, to be paid before the issuance of the final receipt.

All persons who had acquired preference right of entry by reason of contest, or having right allowed them to make an additional or an amended or a second entry and who could not assert that right on account of the withdrawal of the lands will have thirty days from the date thereof as preference right within which to make entry.

All official oaths and bonds that are by law required to be filed or recorded with some of the county officers should be sent in without delay. It is a great inconvenience to have some man call and ask who is the town treasurer or justice of the peace and then to have to state that the bond or official oath has not yet been filed. Town treasurers cannot draw any of the funds before they have filed their bonds. These are matters that no town officials should neglect to attend to.

Grand Forks is having trouble again on account of high water in the Red Lake river, and already dwellers in the flat have moved out temporarily. The ice has gone out of the river over there which will make conditions some better, but when the ice in the Clearwater, Red Lake and tributary streams break up is apt to put them on the move at the Forks for several days. However, not nearly as much damage will be done anywhere in the valley by the water this spring as was anticipated, inasmuch as the snow has disappeared gradually and the ground has absorbed much of the water that would otherwise have gone into the river had the warm spell stayed with us.

How a Swan River Settler Has Succeeded.

Benito, Manitoba, Nov. 26. 1906.

At Swan River Valley, in May, 1900, a settler took up a homestead on Section 30, in Township 34, Range 29 West of the First Meridan, at that time 50 miles from a railway, telegraph, school or church. There is now a railway within two miles of my farm, and all these other advantages close at hand. His story is:

Hours of Labor.

"As a matter of fact," boasted a chronic idler who had been remonstrated with on the score of laziness, "I always do my hard work before breakfast."

"Indeed!" said his friend, considerably astonished. "Whatever's that?"

"Getting out of bed!" was the slothful man's reply.

BLOOD GETS SOUR.

Every Family Should Make Up This Home Mixture and Take Now.

At this time of year, says a well-known authority, the Kidneys become weak, clogged and inactive, failing to filter out the poisons and acids, which sour the blood, causing not only facial and bodily eruptions, but the worst forms of Rheumatism, Nervous and Stomach troubles, Backache and painful, annoying Urinary afflictions.

It is worth anyone's time now to get from some good prescription pharmacy the following ingredients: Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Mix by shaking well in a bottle and take in teaspoonful doses after your meals and at bedtime.

This simple home-made mixture will force the Kidneys to normal, healthy action, so they will filter and strain all uric acid and poisonous waste matter from the blood, and expel this in the urine, at the same time restoring the "full blood count"—that is, 95 per cent. red blood corpuscles—which is absolutely indispensable to perfect health

Hawley—Why, man alive, he called you "a blithering idiot?"

Crawley—Exactly; but, my dear sir, there is no such word in the English dictionary as "blithering."

CHAPTER XIII.—(CONTINUED.)

Alexandrine stood a moment in the door, looking at the lovely picture presented by her young hostess. A pang, vague and unacknowledged, wrung her heart, and showed itself on her countenance. But she came forward with expressions of admiration.

"You are perfect, Margie—absolutely perfect! Poor gentlemen! how I pity them to-night! How their wretched hearts will ache!"

Margie laughed.

"Nonsense, Alex, don't be absurd? Go and dress yourself. I am going to the opera, and you must accompany us."

"Us—who may that plural pronoun embody?"

"Myself—and Mr. Trevlyn."

"Ah! thank you. Mr. Trevlyn may not care for an addition to his nice little arrangement for a tete-a-tete."

"Don't be vexed, Alexandrine. We thought you would pass the evening at your friend's, and Archer only came in to tell me a few hours ago."

"Of course I am not vexed, dear," and the girl kissed Margie's glowing cheek. "Lovers will be lovers the world over. Silly things, always, and never interesting company for other people. How long before Mr. Trevlyn is coming for you?"

Margie consulted her watch.

"At eight. It is now seven. In an hour."

"In an hour! An hour's time! Long enough to change the destiny of empires!"

"How strangely you talk, Alexandrine! What spirit possesses you?" asked Margie, filled, in spite of herself, with a curious premonition of evil.

Alexandrine sat down by the side of her friend, and looked searchingly into her face, her great black eyes holding Margie with a sort of serpent-like fascination.

"Margaret, you love this Archer Trevlyn very dearly, do you not?"

Margie blushed crimson, but she answered, proudly:

"Why need I be ashamed to confess it? I do. I love him with my whole soul."

"And you do not think there is in you any possibility of a change?"

"A change! What do you mean. Explain yourself."

"You do not think the time will ever come when you will cease to love Mr. Archer Trevlyn?"

"It will never come!" Margie replied, indignantly. "never, while I have my reason!"

"Do you believe in love's immortality?"

"I believe that all true love is changeless as eternity! I am not a child, Alexandrine, to be blown about by every passing breeze."

"No, you are a woman now, with a woman's capability of suffering. You ought, also, to be possessed of woman's resolution of a woman's strength to endure sorrow and affliction."

"I have never had any great affliction, Alexandrine. The death of Mr. Linmere was horrible to me, but it was not as if I had loved him; and though I loved Mr. Trevlyn, my guardian, he died so peacefully, that I cannot wish him back. And my dear parents—I was so young then, and they were so willing to go! No, I do not think I have ever had any great sorrow, such as blast people's whole lifetimes."

"But you think you will always continue to love Archer Trevlyn?"

"How strangely you harp on that string! What do you mean? There is something behind all this; I see it in your face. You frighten me!"

"Margie, all people are blind sometimes, but more especially women, when they love. Would it be a mercy to open the eyes of one who, in happy ignorance, was walking over a precipice which the flowers hid from her view?"

Margie shuddered, and the beautiful color fled from her cheek.

"I do not comprehend you. Why do you keep me in suspense?"

"Because I dread to break the charm. You will hate me for it always, Margie. We never love those who tell us disagreeable truths, even though it be for our good."

"I do not know what you would tell me, Alexandrine, but I do not think I shall hate you for it."

"Not if I tell you evil of Archer Trevlyn?"

"I will not listen to it!" she cried, indignantly.

"I expected as much. Well, Margie, you shall not. I will hold my peace; but if ever, in the years to come, the terrible secret should be revealed to you—the secret which would then destroy your happiness for all time—remember that I would have saved you, and you refused to listen!"

She drew her shawl around her shoulders, and rose to go.

Margie caught her arm.

"What is it? You shall tell me! Suspense is worse than certainty."

"And if I tell you, you will keep silent? Silent as the grave itself?"

"Yes, if you wish it."

"Will you swear it?"

"I cannot; but I will keep it just as sacredly."

"I want not only your promise, but your oath. You would not break an oath. And this which I am about to tell you, if known to the world, involves Archer Trevlyn's life! and you refuse to take an oath."

"His life! Yes, I will swear. I would do anything to make his life safer."

"Very well. You understand me fully? You are never to reveal anything I tell you to-night, unless I give you leave. You swear it?"

"I swear it."

"Listen, then. You remember the night Mr. Linmere was murdered?"

Margie grew pale as death, and clasped her hands convulsively.

"Yes, I remember it."

"You desired us, after we had finished dressing you, to leave you alone. We did so, and you locked the door behind us, stepped from the window, and went to the grave of your parents."

"I did."

"You remained there some little time, and when you turned away, you stopped to look back, and in doing so you laid your hand—this one—"she touched Margie's slender left hand, on which shone Archer Trevlyn's betrothal ring—"on the gate post. Do you remember it?"

"Yes, I remember it."

"And while it rested there—while your eyes were turned away, that hand was touched—by something soft, and warm, and sentient—too warm, too passionate, to be the kiss of a disembodied soul. Living human lips, that scorched into your flesh, and thrilled you as nothing else ever had the power to thrill you!"

Margie trembled convulsively,her color came and went, and she clasped and unclasped her hands with nervous agitation.

"Am I not speaking the truth?"

"Yes, yes—go on. I am listening."

"Was there, in all the world, at that time, more than one person whose kiss had the power to thrill you as that kiss thrilled you? Answer me, Margie Harrison!"

"I will not! You have no right to ask me!" she replied, passionately.

"It is useless to attempt disguise,Margie. I can read your very thoughts. At the moment you felt that touch, you knew instinctively who was near you. You felt and acknowledged the presence of one who has no right to be kissing the hand of another man's promised wife. And yet the forbidden sin of that person was sweet to you. You stooped and pressed your lips where his had been! Whose?"

"I do not know—indeed, I do not! Why do you torture me so, Alexandrine?"

"My poor child, I will say no more. Good night, Margie. I trust you will have a pleasant evening with Mr. Trevlyn."

Margie caught the flowing skirt of Miss Lee's dress.

"You shall tell me all! I must know. I have heard too much to be kept in ignorance of the remainder."

"So be it. You shall hear all. You know that Archer Trevlyn was in the graveyard or near it, that night, though you might not see him. Yet you were sure of his presence—"

"I was not! I tell you, I was not!" she cried fiercely. "I saw no one; not a person!"

"Then, if you were not sure of his presence, you loved some other; else why did you put your lips where those of a stranger had been? In that case you were doubly false!"

Margie's cheeks were crimson with shame. She covered her face with her hands, and was silent.

"How many can you love at once, Margie Harrison?"

"Alexandrine, you are cruel!—cruel! Is it not enough for you to tell me the truth, without torturing me thus?"

CHAPTER XIV.

A FLASH of conscious triumph crossed the cold face of Miss Lee, and then she was as calm as before.

"No,I am not cruel—only truthful. You cannot deny that you knew Archer Trevlyn was near you. You will not deny it. Margie. I know what love is—I know something of its keen, subtle instincts. I should recognize the vicinity of the man I loved, though all around me were as black as midnight."

"Well, what then?" asked Margie, defiantly.

"Wait and see. I followed you out that night, with no definite purpose in my mind. Perhaps it was curiosity to see what a romantic woman, about to be married to a man she does not love, would do. I stood outside the hedge of arbor vitae while you were inside. I saw the tall, shadowy figure which bent its head upon your hand, and I saw you when you put your mouth where his had been. When you went away I did not go. Something kept me behind. A moment afterward, I heard voices inside the hedge—just one exclamation from each person—I could swear to that! and then—O heaven!"

"What then!"

"A blow! a dull, terrible thud, a smothered groan, a fall—and I stood there powerless to move—stricken dumb and motionless! And while I stood transfixed, some person rushed past me, breathless, panting, reckless of everything save escape! Margie, it was so dark that I could not be positive, but I am morally certain that the person I saw was Archer Trevlyn!"

"My God!" Margie cowered down to the floor, and hid her face in the folds of Alexandrine's dress.

"Hear me through," Miss Lee went on, relentlessly, her face growing colder and harder with every word. "Hear me through, and then decide for yourself. Let no opinion of mine bias your judgment. I stood there a moment longer, and then, when suspended volition came back to me, I fled from the place. Margie, words cannot express to you my distress, my bitter, burning anguish! It was like to madness! But sooner than have divulged my suspicions, I would have killed myself! For I loved Archer Trevlyn with a depth and fervor which your cool nature has no conception of. I love him still, though I feel convinced, from the bottom of my soul, that he is a murderer!"

Her cheeks grew brilliant as red roses, her eyes sparkled like stars. Margie looked into the bewilderingly beautiful face with suspended breath. The woman's passionate presence scorched her; she could not be herself, with those eyes of fire blazing down into hers.

Alexandrine resumed, "I am wasting time. Let me hurry on to the end, or your lover will be here before I finish."

"My lover!" cried Margie, in a dazed sort of way, "my lover? O yes, I remember, Archer Trevlyn was coming Is it nearly time for him?"

Alexandrine took the shrinking, cowering girl by the shoulders, and lifted her into a seat.

"Rouse yourself, Margie. I have not done. I want you to hear it all."

"Yes, I am hearing."

It was pitiful to see how helpless and weak the poor child had become. All sense of joy and sorrow seemed to have died out of her.

"I feared so much that when the body of the murdered man should be discovered, there would be some clue which would point to the guilty party! Such a night as I passed, while they searched for the body! I thought I should go mad!" She hid her face in her hand and her figure shook like a leaf in the autumn wind.

"When the dog took us to the grave yard. I thought I would be the first inside— I would see if there was anything left on the ground to point to the real murderer. You remember that I picked up something, do you not?"

"I do. Your glove, was it not?"

"Yes. It was my glove! I defy the whole world to take it from me! I would die before such proof should be brought against the man I love!" she cried wildly. "See here!"

She drew from her bosom a kid glove, stained and stiff with blood.

"Margie, have you ever seen it before? Look here. It has been mended; sewed with blue silk! Do you remember anything about it?"

"Yes; I saw you mend it at Cape May," she answered, the words forced from her, apparently, without her volition.

"You are right. He had torn it while rowing me out, one morning. I saw the rent and offered to repair it. He makes his gloves wear well, doesn't he?"

"O don't! don't! how can you? Alexandrine, wake me, for mercy's sake! This is some horrible dream."

"I would to heaven it were! It would be happier for us all. But if you feel any doubt about the identity of the glove, look here." She turned back the wrist, and there on the inside, written in the bold characters, which were a peculiarity of Arch Trevlyn's handwriting, was the name in full—Archer Trevlyn.

Margie shrank back and covered her eyes, as if to shut out the terrible proof. Alexandrine returned the glove to her bosom, and then continued:

"The handkerchief found near Mr. Linmere was marked with the single letter A. Whose name begins with that lettter?"

"Stop, I implore you! I shall lose my reason! I am blinded—I cannot see! O, if I could only die, and leave it all!"

GROWTH OF THE SILK TRADE.

New York Imports 95 Per Cent of the Silk Coming to This Country.

The growth of the silk industry in this country makes an interesting study, says the Mail and Express. The annual product of the American mills is worth about $100,000,000. Not only has there been a marked increase in recent years in both the value and amount of production, but the mills have produced classes of goods never before attempted. Silk is now used for such a great number of purposes that its manufacture and importing has grown to be a leading industry. In an interview a New Yorker who is an authority on everything pertaining to the manufacture and importing of silk said recently: "We can make anything in the silk line that can be made in the world and that there is a market for There are, however, certain high novelties that we no not make. One of the noteworthy features of the trade during the last decade is the decline in the price of raw silk and the great improvement in nearly every department of machinery and appliances. The silk imports at New York comprise fully 95 per cent of the total value of silk imports in this country. The large mills are all represented in New York so that the metropolis in this industry is in most others, is the center of distribution for this country.

An automatic electrical semaphore has been perfected for trolley road crossings. It is so arranged that a car approaching from either direction will cause danger signals to be displayed at the point of intersection of the two roads while the car is still some distance from the crossing.

ARE NOT CURIOUS

WASHINGTON CITIZENS SHOW LACK OF INQUISITIVENESS.

Leading Lights of the Nation Too Common at the Capital to Command More Than Passing Attention from Residents.

Living in Washington is a man 99 years old who has passed nearly 80 years there and has never set foot inside the capitol.

At the Virginia end of the Aqueduct bridge, across the upper Potomac, is a woman past 80, who, living within half a mile of Washington all her life, has never been in Washington.

The old Washingtonian, who is hale and intelligent, said when questioned that he'd never cared to go inside the capitol. There was no business calling him there. He'd always been perfectly willing to let the folks inside the capitol go their ways if they'd only let him alone.

The old woman at the other end of the Aqueduct bridge observed in response to an interviewer's inquiries that she'd never crossed over to Washington because she'd never cared to. She'd always had enough work to do without gadding about.

These two old persons fairly represent the lack of inquisiveness which is perhaps the strongest characteristic of the people who live in and around Washington. Washingtonians are probably the least curious people on earth.

On New Year's day, when the president received the general public, the double line of people eager to grasp his hand curved in two directions out of the White House grounds and upon the streets till four or five o'clock in the afternoon, though the reception began at noon. Of the thousands in those two patient lines hardly any were Washingtonians.

Washingtonians don't attend public receptions at the White House. The lines were made up of visitors who came here especially for the purpose and of folks residing here transiently. If, by dropping a cent in the slot, the average Washingtonian could be instantly whisked to the White House, there to receive the double mitt from the president, a "Dee-lighted!" or two, and a little narrative about a bull moose or the art of hitting a timber wolf or a fawn in the left shoulder with an express bullet, it isn't in the least likely that the average Washingtonian would be attracted by the investment.

This feature of Washington's characteristic indifference is a growth of comparatively recent years. Washingtonians did go to Mr. McKinley's public receptions in quite considerable numbers. They attended the public levees of Mr. Harrison and Mr. Cleveland, too, and they fairly swarmed through the east room when Mr. Arthur was president. But they have entirely remained away from these affairs at the White House in recent years.

Washington folks don't flock to the capitol at all. The big people don't appear to interest them. Washingtonians are pretty close to the wires of government, and this may account for the lack of interest in the wire manipulators.

A representative of congress is an almost inconsequential figure in Washington. A senator isn't so much, either.

Every day the vice president of the United States walks down Pennsylvania avenue from the capitol, accompanied by some senator or other. The vice president is a very tall person—so tall as to make him an unusual figure, on account of his stature and the silk hat atop of the stature, almost anywhere. But never a Washingtonian wheels around to gaze after the vice president.

Hint for Vice President.

A New York man visited the senate gallery in Washington and from his coign of vantage there had a good look at the vice president's carefully concealed bald head. On returning home he wrote to his congressman, saying: "If you have any influence with Mr. Fairbanks, for heaven's sake get him to cut off that scalplock that he drapes over the top of his head and admit that he is bald. The people will elect a bald-headed man president sooner than they'll elect a man who tries to deceive them as to his baldness."

Few Senators Hear Prayers.

Attendance at prayers in the United States senate is not large, but it always includes Senators Platt and Depew, who usually sit together and withdraw before the business of the day begins. Sometimes there are only five or six who assemble to hear Dr. Hale's invocation. Upon a recent occasion there were seven, and a curious observer made a memorandum of their names. In addition to Platt and Depew there were Perkins of California, Smoot of Utah, Dick of Ohio, McCreary of Kentucky and Clark of Montana.

Might Take a Chance.

A coterie of Washington "cabbies" were waiting for their patrons after the show the other night. The numbers were being called out, and one by one the drivers hurried away with their fares. Finally but two remained, and then came the call for one of them. As he whipped up his horses he tantalizingly cried: "Come on along," and quick as a flash came the reply: "Ah, I might as well; my party is so cross-eyed he won't know his number anyhow."

A One-Armed Life Saver.

One of the life savers along the Delaware river front is Paul Greenwood, now a resident of Chester, Pa. Greenwood lost an arm and a leg several years ago, but despite this misfortune he continues at his work of saving lives of people who fall overboard.

Not long ago he saw five Philadelphians struggling in the water off Marcus Hook, their yacht having capsized. He jumped into a boat and hurried to the scene of the upset yacht and saved all of the members of the party. Most of them were women.

CURED OF GRAVEL.

Not a Single Stone Has Formed Since Using Doan's Kidney Pills.

J. D. Daughtrey, music publisher, of Suffolk, Va., says: "During two or three years that I had kidney trouble I passed 2½ pounds of gravel and sandy sediment in the urine. I haven't passed a stone since using Doan's Kidney Pills, however, and that was three years ago. I used to suffer the most acute agony during a gravel attack, and had the other usual symptoms of kidney trouble—lassitude, headache, pain in the back, urinary disorders, rheumatic pain, etc. I have a box containing 14 gravel stones that I passed, but that is not one-quarter of the whole number. I consider Doan's Kidney Pills a fine kidney tonic."

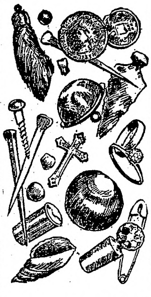
CARRIED FOR LUCK

ALMOST EVERY ONE HAS A POCKET TRINKET.

Showing Mild Form of Superstition From Which Few Men Are Free—Some of Them Have Interesting History.

The tailor was industriously brushing and steaming a pile of garments. On the pressing table lay a little heap of trinkets. Testing his iron with a deft touch of his moistened finger, he placed it back on the sputtering little gas stove to heat. Then he answered the question about the pile of trinkets.

"Oh, those," he said, "why, they come from the pockets of clothing sent here to be cleaned or pressed. Nearly every man has his 'rabbit's foot.' No matter how staid a business man he may be, nor how strongly he would deny that he was superstitious, he almost invariably has a pocket piece that he carries for luck. Look at this little piece of flint. It would be hard to explain the reason for carrying it. Yet I know that the owner of that checked suit over there, a business man, must prize the little rock, for no matter what pocket I put it in when I return the suit, it is always in the lower left-hand pocket of the waistcoat when the suit comes around for its regular pressing. He evidently don't want to lose it, and as it has no apparent beauty or utility, it must be 'good luck.'



A Collection of Good Luck Pieces.

"This penny dated 1888 has been in one of my customer's clothes for two years. One day my curiosity got the upper hand and I laid it aside and didn't return it with his clothes. The very next day he came in at the noon hour and inquired for the coin, giving the date and describing a microscopic scratch that I had not noticed. I handed him the penny and in a burst of confidence he told me 'the why' of its preciousness. One day it was up to him to decide a deal quickly. He was up against it—didn't know what was advisable. Should he sell or buy? He struggled with his indecision and in desperation he flipped the penny and it said sell. He sold and cleared a good margin.

"That 1888 penny wanders from one suit to another, but it is never lost. I suppose that similar stories would explain the most of these buttons, bits of metal, knotted rubber bands and all the other pocket junk you see here. They are amulets. Yet we make sport of the ignorant heathen."

In the pile were: A brass button from a soldier's uniform, a horse chestnut, a dozen coins, a baby's tooth, a dried bug, several pebbles and shells, an empty brass revolver cartridge, a safety pin, a leaden bullet, a glass bottle stopper, several rings, a brass screw, three horseshoe nails, a shoe button, a woman's broken brooch, a medal and a tiny gold cross.

Crocodile Captured Slave Trader.

The trade in slaves has entirely ceased in Sokoto, but in Banchi there was a recrudescence of it, due to famine, the people preferring to sell themselves as slaves rather than starve as freemen.

Ten years ago, it is recalled, the entire Angass tribe sold themselves into slavery, but when the famine is over they take the first opportunity to desert. In the province of Muri famine gave a great impetus to the trade in children, who were sold for food.

One grim incident is recorded. "The canoes," says the report, "travel by night and are concealed by day. One, which was discovered in a backwater, with 22 children on board, was pushed out into midstream by the traders and apparently purposely capsized. The slave traders swam for the bank, but one was held by the leg by a crocidile and captured; 12 children were drowned."

Essence From Orange Leaves.

One of the industries of Paraguay is the preparation of essence of orange leaves. More than 150 years ago the Jesuit priests who then ruled that secluded country imported orange seeds and planted groves, which have now become immense forests, filled with small establishments for extracting the essence. This is exported to France and the United States for use in soap and perfumery making.

Porter Springs Surprise.

Chevrolet, the automobilist, was talking at Ormonde to a New York Press man about American railways.

"Your railways are superb," he said. "Abroad we have nothing like them. In speed, comfort, in luxury American railways lead the world.

"But the expense!

"On my way down to Florida I said to the porter as the time drew near for us to part:

"'Porter, you have been very attentive, and I want to give you something, but I have no change.'

"Then I took out a $20 bill from my wallet.

"'Certainly, sir,' the porter answered, pulling out a large roll of money. 'How will you have it, sir? In fives?'"

In Terms of Pig.

The ingenuity of the Chinese in surmounting difficulties is well illustrated by the following dialogue which recently took place on the Imperial Chinese railway:

Traveler—I wish to ship these two dogs to Pekin. What is the rate?

Railway Official—No got any rate for dog; one dog all same one sheep; one sheep all same two pig; can book four pig.

Traveler—But one dog is only a puppy; he ought to go for half fare.

Railway Official—Can do, all right! Then, turning to his clerk, "Write three pig," he said.

Appreciated Publication.

"I must say," remarked Farmer Corntossel, "that the Congressional Record is the paper for me."

"You enjoy reading it?"

"No, I can't say as I do. But I like the way it's edited. Rather than fill up with divorce suits an' murder trials it suspends publication altogether."

FURIOUS HUMOR ON CHILD.

Itching, Bleeding Sores Covered Body—Nothing Helped Her—Cuticura Cures Her in Five Days.

"After my granddaughter of about seven years had been cured of the measles, she was attacked about a fortnight later by a furious itching and painful eruption all over her body, especially the upper part of it, forming watery and bleeding sores, especially under the arms, of considerable size. She suffered a great deal and for three weeks we nursed her every night, using all the remedies we could think of. Nothing would help. We tried the Cuticura Remedies and after twenty-four hours we noted considerable improvement, and after using only one complete set of the Cuticura Remedies, in five consecutive days the little one, much to our joy, had been entirely cured, and has been well for a long time. Mrs. F. Ruefenacht, R. F. D. No. 3, Bakersfield, Cal., June 25 and July 20, 1906."

One of the Important Duties of Physicians and the Well-Informed of the World is to learn as to the relative standing and reliability of the leading manufacturers of medicinal agents, as the most eminent physicians are the most careful as to the uniform quality and perfect purity of remedies prescribed by them, and it is well known to physicians and the Well-Informed generally that the California Fig Syrup Co., by reason of its correct methods and perfect equipment and the ethical character of its product has attained to the high standing in scientific and commercial circles which is accorded to successful and reliable houses only, and, therefore, that the name of the Company has become a guarantee of the excellence of its remedy.

TRUTH AND QUALITY

appeal to the Well-Informed in every walk of life and are essential to permanent success and creditable standing, therefore we wish to call the attention of all who would enjoy good health, with its blessings, to the fact that it involves the question of right living with all the term implies. With proper knowledge of what is best each hour of recreation, of enjoyment, of contemplation and of effort may be made to contribute to that end and the use of medicines dispensed with generally to great advantage, but as in many instances a simple, wholesome remedy may be invaluable if taken at the proper time, the California Fig Syrup Co. feels that it is alike important to present truthfully the subject and to supply the one perfect laxative remedy which has won the appoval of physicians and the world-wide acceptance of the Well-Informed because of the excellence of the combination, known to all, and the original method of manufacture, which is known to the California Fig Syrup Co. only.

This valuable remedy has been long and favorably known under the name of—Syrup of Figs—and has attained to world-wide acceptance as the most excellent of family laxatives, and as its pure laxative principles, obtained from Senna, are well known to physicians and the Well-Informed of the world to be the best of natural laxatives, we have adopted the more elaborate name of—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna—as more fully descriptive of the remedy, but doubtless it will always be called for by the shorter name of Syrup of Figs—and to get its beneficial effects always note, when purchasing, the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—plainly printed on the front of every package, whether you simply call for—Syrup of Figs—or by the full name—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna—as—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna—is the one laxative remedy manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. and the same heretofore known by the name—Syrup of Figs—which has given satisfaction to millions. The genuine is for sale by all leading druggists throughout the United States in original packages of one size only, the regular price of which is fifty cents per bottle.

Every bottle is sold under the general guarantee of the Company, filed with the Secretary of Agriculture, at Washington, D. C., that the remedy is not adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of the Food and Drugs Act, June 30th, 1906.

CATARRH BLOOD DISEASED AND SYSTEM DISORDERED

Catarrh is not merely an inflammation of the tissues of the head and throat, as the symptoms of ringing noises in the ears, mucous dropping back into the throat, continual hawking and spitting, etc., would seem to indicate; it is a blood disease in which the entire circulation and the greater part of the system are involved. Catarrh is due to the presence of an excess of uric acid in the blood. The Liver, Kidneys and Bowels frequently become torpid and dull in their action and instead of carrying off the refuse and waste of the body, leave it to sour and form uric acid in the system. This is taken up by the blood and through its circulation distributed to all parts of the system. These impurities in the blood irritate and inflame the different membranes and tissues of the body, and the contracting of a cold will start the secretions and other disgusting and disagreeable symptoms of Catarrh. As the blood goes to all parts of the body the catarrhal poison affects all parts of the system. The head has a tight, full feeling, nose continually stopped up, pains above the eyes, slight fever comes and goes, the stomach is upset and the entire system disordered and affected by this disease. It is a waste of time to try to cure Catarrh with sprays, washes, inhalations, etc. Such treatment does not reach the blood, and can, therefore, do nothing more than temporarily relieve the discomfort of the trouble. To cure Catarrh permanently the blood must be thoroughly purified and the system cleansed of all poisons, and at the same time strengthened and built up. Nothing equals S. S. S. for this purpose. It attacks the disease at its head, goes down to the very bottom of the trouble and makes a complete and lasting cure. S. S. S. removes every particle of the catarrhal poison from the blood, making this vital stream pure, fresh and healthy. Then the inflamed membranes begin to heal, the head is loosened and cleared, the hawking and spitting cease, every symptom disappears, the constitution is built up and vigorous health restored. S. S. S. also tones up the stomach and digestion and acts as a fine tonic to the entire system. If you are suffering with Catarrh begin the use of S. S. S. and write us a statement of your case and our physicians will send you literature about Catarrh, and give you special medical advice without charge. S. S. S. is for sale at all first class drug stores.

I had Catarrh for about fifteen years, and no man could have been worse. I tried everything I could hear of, but no good resulted. I then began S. S. S., and could see a little improvement from the first bottle, and after taking it a short while was cured. This was six years ago, and I am as well today as any man. I think Catarrh is a blood disease, and know there is nothing on earth better for the blood than S. S. S. Nobody thinks more of S. S. S. than I do. M. MATSON, Lapeer, Mich.

Revivals Over.

The Hamilton-Bursk meetings, which have been in progress during the past two weeks, closed last Sunday night. The meetings were largely attended although the bad roads prevented many country families from attending. Rev. John S. Hamilton, the evangelist, is a man of strong personality, and he preaches with great force and enthusiasm. Prof. John R. Bursk was very successful with his chorus singing. The "Sunbeam chorus" of boys and girls was an especially attractive feature at the meetings. The Presbyterian church will receive a large number of additions during the next six weeks as a direct result of the work of these evangelists. They are now at work in Hallock.

It aims to clear the blood entirely of Rheumatic poisons, and then Rheumatism must die a natural death. Sold by all dealers.

Indigestion

Stomach trouble is but a symptom of, and not in itself a true disease. We think of Dyspepsia, Heartburn, and Indigestion as real diseases, yet they are symptoms only of a certain specific Nerve sickness—nothing else.

It was this fact that first correctly led Dr. Shoop in the creation of that now very popular Stomach Remedy—Dr. Shoop's Restorative. Going direct to the stomach nerves, alone brought that success and favor to Dr. Shoop and his Restorative. Without that original and highly vital principle, no such lasting accomplishments were ever to be had.

For stomach distress, bloating, biliousness, bad breath and sallow complexion, try Dr. Shoop's Restorative—Tablets or Liquid—and see for yourself what it can and will do. We sell and cheerfully recommend

IN FINAL CONCERT

Local Band Organization Will Entertain Friday Evening of Next Week.

The local band boys will be hosts at a big concert, reception and blowout at the Metropolitan opera house on Friday evening of next week, the 26th inst., when the final indoor concert of the season of '06-'07 will be given. The affair will be made an important one in the history of the band, as on this occasion will the boys give their farewell tribute to J. B. Armstrong and L. P. Berthon—Jim and Paul—who appear for the last time with the band in indoor program. These gentlemen will be here a few months yet, but as this is to be the final indoor concert during their residence, the band thought it a proper time to give them a farewell tribute. After the concert a social dance will be given, and the affair promises to be one of great enjoyment to all. No admission price whatever will be charged and the people are all cordially invited to turn out. The only restriction will be that children must be accompanied by their parents to be admitted.

J. B. Armstrong and L. P. Berthon have been associated with band business in Red Lake Falls for a number of years past, and have seen the ups and downs of it all, in trying to build up and maintain a successful organization. The band proposition had been a hard one here until five years ago last winter, when mainly through the efforts of this same L. P. Berthon a movement was started for a band that would be a permanent fixture and one that the citizens might well be proud of. Through the efforts of Mr. Berthon a list of citizen subscribers were secured, the city council was prevailed upon for a little keep, and the result was that a leader was hired and the organization formed. Naturally the building up of the band to its present stage of excellence has not been all roses, but through the tireless efforts of such members as Mr. Berthon, Mr. Armstrong and others, things have been kept moving, and what the result has been is common knowledge to the people here. All this has taken time, money and energy to do, but it has been a labor of love for those who have carried the burden of the work, and they are today satisfied that it was well done.

Naturally the band boys feel like paying these men a farewell tribute for the faithfulness they have shown and whatever is done will be far too little in appreciation of their labors. The band wants the whole town to join with them in this reception, and to this end have made the affair a public one, absolutely free to all. The program is a good one and those who attend can rest assured that they will be royally entertained.

The following is the program:

H. P. HALL ANSWERS DEATH'S SUMMONS

VETERAN NEWSPAPER MAN DIES SUDDENLY OF HEART FAILURE.

ACTIVE LIFE COMES TO END

KNOWN PERSONALLY BY MORE PEOPLE IN NORTHWEST THAN ANY OTHER MAN.

St. Paul, April 11.Harlan Page Hall, dean of the newspaper profession in the Northwest, who knew more people and probably was known personally by more people in the Northwest than any other man, died suddenly at the office of Dr. G. M. Coon, in the Lowry arcade, yesterday afternoon. He was discovered dead in a chair by an attendant who, seeing his quiet form, supposed he had fallen asleep. Some people entered the office, but they did not notice anything unusual, supposing that Mr. Hall was sleeping in the chair.

Mr. Hall went into the building about 2 o'clock to see Dr. Archibald MacLaren. Finding the door closed, he stepped into Dr. Coon's office to wait. He picked up a newspaper to read, and while perusing it passed quietly away. Death was due to heart failure, for which he had been treating, together with kidney trouble, since last winter.

Was on Duty During Day.

He was at the capitol in the morning and attended to his duties as clerk of the committee on general legislation in the senate. He was around town during the noon hour and talked in his usual cheerful manner with many people. Despite the fact that he was verging close to threescore and ten, he had been enjoying his usual vigor until about a year ago.

Mr. Hall was a life member of the Minnesota Historical society and Ohio society. He is survived by two daughters, Miss Elizabeth B. Hall, St. Paul, and Mrs. M. B. Gardner, Cleveland, Ohio, and one son, Harlan W. Hall, Pasadena, Cal. Mrs. Hall died about two years ago. Mr. and Mrs. Hall were married at Cleveland, Ohio, April 9, 1862, so that yesterday was the forty-fifth anniversary of their wedding.

Mr. Hall's Career.

Mr. Hall was born Aug. 27, 1838, at Ravenna, Ohio. He learned the printer's trade in his father's office at that place. He came to St. Paul in 1862 and was employed in an editorial capacity at various times on the St. Paul Press, St. Paul Union and St. Paul Pioneer. In 1868, in partnership with David Ramaley, he established the Dispatch, which he sold eight years later. Subsequently he established the St. Paul Newspaper Union for the purpose of furnishing ready-printed sheets to country newspapers.

In 1878 Mr. Hall started the St. Paul Globe, which he owned seven years, selling it to Lewis Baker. His next newspaper enterprise was a paper called the Daily News. In the early '90s he established the Morning Call, which had a brief career. Later he purchased the St. Paul Trade Journal, which he conducted eight years. In recent years he has devoted his time mostly to literary work.

Mr. Hall was the founder of the Minnesota Editorial association and was a member of the executive committee.

DELMAS PLEADS IN THAW FINALE

ELOQUENT CALIFORNIAN APPEALS TO SYMPATHIES OF JURORS.

EVELYN'S MOTHER IS LASHED

ARGUMENT BASED ON STORY OF DEFENDANT'S WIFE—WHITE SCORED.

New York, April 10. — The trial of Harry K. Thaw, charged with the murder of Stanford White, is nearing the end. Attorney Delmas yesterday afternoon began his closing address to the jury and after he had spoken for more than two hours and a half an adjournment was taken until morning. Mr. Delmas expects to conclude before the luncheon hour is reached.

Declaring he would not base his plea upon the "unwritten law" because his client found ample protection in the written statutes of the State of New York, Mr. Delmas made a striking appeal to the sympathies of the jurors.

Evelyn's Mother Denounced.

He based his argument solely upon the story of Evelyn Nesbit Thaw. With flushed cheeks but dry eyes, that young woman heard her life history repeated and bowed her head as her mother was denounced in the bitterest tone the eloquent lawyer could command. Mr. Delmas went with great detail into the life of Evelyn Nesbit. He told of Thaw's great love for her and his efforts to rescue her from the clutches of Stanford White.

White Bitterly Scored.

Mr. Delmas poured out a torrent of denunciation upon the architect who became the victim of Thaw's pistol, accused him of the crime of "rape" and then declared that President Roosevelt had said in a message to congress that such a crime should be visited with death.

Mr. Delmas declared that God heard the cry of the fated child upon whom Stanford White had fixed his gaze and had determined should be his. He quoted from Scripture that "He who afflicts a fatherless child shall perish," and declared that Providence had sent Thaw to avenge the wrong.

APPEALS TO "UNWRITTEN" LAW.

Delmas Concludes Plea for Thaw in Drmatic Flight of Oratory.

New York, April 11.—With an oratorical appeal to both the written and the "unwritten" law for the justification of his client, Delphin M. Delmas, the California attorney, concluded his exhaustive summing up address to the Thaw jury yesterday afternoon.

With the exception of the moments when he was reading from testimony, Mr. Delmas' speech yesterday was one of sustained oratorical effect. He threw about the form of Harry Thaw the cloak of chivalrous knighthood.

Thaw a Brave Man.

"Why, he shouted, "should we who admire the chivalry of the knights of the Middle Ages, who went about redressing wrongs and rescuing maidens in distress, withhold our sympathy from this brave man?" Bitterly the attorney again assailed Stanford White. He declared White sought to play with the girl so long as her beauty remained and then would have thrown her away "like a dirty rag, to float down life's sewers to a grave in the potter's field."

Instrument of Providence.

With dramatic emphasis Mr. Delmas cried out that when Harry Thaw beheld Stanford White on the Madison Square roof garden, the story of his wife's wrongs overcame him. He pictured in an instant, as a dying man may picture his past life, all that Stanford White had done, the ruin he had wrought; and he struck—struck as the tigress strikes in defense of her young; struck for the home; struck for American women; struck for humanity—and Stanford White fell."

"Ah, gentlemen," the advocate went on, "if Harry Thaw believed he was the instrument of Providence, who shall say he was mistaken?"

"Unwritten Law."

It was in discussing Thaw's mental state that, Mr. Delmas came at last to the "unwritten law." He declared the experts had been at a loss to classify the form of insanity from which Thaw suffered.

"I will suggest its name," he declared. "I would call it 'dementia Americana.' It is a species of insanity which has been recognized in every state of this Union. It is that species of insanity which makes the American man believe his home, his wife, his daughters, are sacred, and that whosoever stains the virtue of his threshold violates the highest of human laws."

St. Paul, April 5.—The house yesterday passed the bill raising the governor's salary from $5.000 to $7.000, with not a vote to spare over the 60 required for passage and with 50 votes against it. But the house refused to pass the bill increasing the salaries of the judges of the supreme court and the district courts and sent the bill back to general orders. The debate on both bills was long and at times spirited.

A bill was passed authorizing cities of from 10,000 to 20,000 inhabitants to annex adjoining territory in which is located a state institution when agreeable to the council and the state board of control.

Among the bills advanced in committee of the whole were: To regulate the practice of veterinary medicine, surgery and dentistry; to authorize cities to acquire, construct, own, operate and lease public utilities and to provide the means therefor; providing for the payment of all road and bridge taxes in money and for the appointment of county superintendent of highways and a road inspector in town, and defining their duties in all counties of the state having less than 200,000.

St. Paul, April 6.—The legislative salary bill was passed out by the house committe of the whole yesterday without opposition. The bill gives each member of the legislature $500 for each year for which he is elected and $5 a day additional for the speaker of the house and the president of the senate. There was another struggle over the judges' salary bill yesterday, and the bill as amended and passed out yesterday stands a good chance of passing. The salary of the supreme court justices is left at $7,000, as provided in the senate bill, but the district judges are cut to $4,200, with $1,500 additional in the three large counties. This is an increase of $2,000 for the supreme justices and $700 for the district judges.

A bill appropriating $300,000 for summer sessions at the state normal schools was passed under suspension of the rules.

The house passed the two drainage bills prepared by the drainage committee. The general bill provides a comprehensive system of draining state lands and leaves the work in charge of the present commission, composed of the governor, auditor and secretary of state. A detailed system of procedure for the establishment of ditches is provided. The owners of private lands may start the proceedings by petition or they may be started by the commission, but in all cases the private land owners are to be assessed for benefits the same as under the county or judicial drainage system. The second bill provides that the cost of drainage of state lands shall be added to the minimum price for which state lands may be sold and also that 3 per cent interest shall be charged upon this amount until it is paid.

In the Senate.

The senate passed the bill proposing an amendment to the constitution authorizing the state auditor to levy an acreage tax on lands insured against loss by hail, at the option of the land owners, for the purpose of creating an insurance fund against damages to crops from hail storms.

The bill authorizing counties to appropriate money for making exhibits showing the resources of the counties at the state fair in 1908 was passed.

Representatives Jefferson and Bjorge offered another resolution relative to the iron mining industry. This time they want the legislature to instruct the railroad and warehouse commission to cut the freight rates on the two ore roads, the Duluth, Missabe & Northern and the Duluth & Iron Range. A cut of 40 per cent is suggested.

Among the bills passed were: Proposing an amendment to Article XIX. of the constitution of the state relative to taxation; relating to the removal of all logs, posts, poles, timbers and lumber abandoned, submerged and sunken in the beds of and obstructing the waters, lakes and watercourses of Minnesota, and to define and determine the ownership and provide for the disposition thereof.

In the Senate.

Liberal provision for the state university in the way of additional grounds for the campus and new buildings is made in a bill reported for passage by the senate finance committee. The bill provides for the levying of a tax sufficient to raise $300,000 for 1907 and for each of the next three years, making a total for the four years of $1,200,000.

The senate passed under suspension of the rules the bill which allows the county surveyor to carry on road repair work for seven months in the year instead of four, as the present law allows.

The senate passed the bill which is designed to make the Pullman company pay a considerably higher tax than it is now paying. The bill provides for a tax of 4 per cent on gross earnings of sleeping car companies.

Three hours' work was put in in committee of the whole. Thirty-four bills were advanced to the calendar.

The primary election bills were made a special order for Wednesday morning at 11 o'clock instead of Monday, as was decided upon Friday.

St. Paul, April 9.—The house had a slight attendance yesterday morning, and spent the time passing bills on the calendar. In the afternoon the house went into committee of the whole, and a number of bills were recommended for passage.

The bill proposing the constitutional amendment relating to the adoption or amendment of home-rule charters was favorably reported. The bill provides that charters may be adopted by a four-sevenths vote of those voting on the proposition and may be amended by a vote of three-fifths of those voting on the amendment, instead of those voting at the election, as at present.

The committee of the whole passed favorably on the bill placing the regulation of street railways in the hands of the railroad and warehouse commission.

The bill requiring the licensing of peddlers was also recommended for passage.

The bill authorizing cities or villages to prohibit bucket shops or their agencies within their corporate limits was passed.

The house passed the bill providing for a state board of nurses' examiners and requiring the examination of professional nurses.

The bill authorizing the annexation of territory adjacent to cities of 10,000 to 20,000 was passed.

The house in committee of the whole last night killed the bill to abolish capital punishment in Minnesota.

In the Senate.

The senate passed the bill carrying an annual appropriation for road and bridge work, the money to be expended under the supervision of the county commissioners.

The senate passed twelve bills in all, but except for the foregoing none were of general interest.

In committee of the whole the following bills were recommended: To prevent deception in the sale of paint; to authorize the board of control of state institutions to maintain a plant for the manufacture of barb wire, woven wire and wire nails at the state prison; to establish a state board of visitors for state institutions; to create a state board of examiners for chiropractic methods and to regulate the practice of the same; to prevent candidates for elective offices pledging themselves, without knowledge of the electors, to favor or oppose measures and bills and to prevent the solicitation of such pledges from candidates; to abolish the board of directors of the Minnesota school for the deaf and blind and to confer upon the state board of control the exclusive management thereof.

St. Paul, April 10.—The house yesterday went on record as favoring a third term for President Roosevelt. Representative Swan Nelson of Minneapolis presented a resolution to that effect, which was adopted by a rising vote and without debate. The Democratic members did not vote.

The end of the railroad litigation which, it was expected, would tie up freight and passenger reductions during the next three to five years is now in sight. The house last night passed a freight rate bill which is a compromise between the present commodity rates and the reduced commodity rates ordered by the state railroad commission. The bill provides an average reduction in commodity rates of 10 per cent.

It is believed that the railroads will accept the rates provided in the bill. It is also suggested that the roads will accept the 2-cent passenger fare bill. Should they do so the people of the state will be the gainers by nearly $4,000,000, as much as if the railroad commission's order went into effect now, as the reduction in freight rates provided in the bill with the reduction in passenger fares from 3 to 2 cents a mile will amount in the aggregate to the same as the reduction of freight rates ordered by the commission without the passenger fare reduction.

The house last night passed the bill judges' salary bill by a vote of 64 to 31. The bill increases the supreme court justices from $5,000 to $7,000, and the district judges from $3,500 to $4,200, with the present additional $1,500 in the three large counties.

The house killed the bill the purpose of which was to enable voters of cities to legislate for themselves. The bill proposed an amendment to the constitution to make practicable the adoption and amendment of home-rule charters.

The bill requiring all corporations in the state to pay a fee when filing their articles of incorporation was passed.

The house passed the bill requiring an examination of the eyes and ears of all pupils in the public schools.

The bill for the creation of a hospital farm for inebriates was passed. Under the bill a tax of 2 per cent of all license money collected in the state is to be levied to provide funds for the site, buildings and maintenance. The farm is to care for those habitually addicted to the use of intoxicants and drugs.

The child labor bill was passed yesterday. The bill is patterned after the law which Senator Beveridge of Indiana is trying to have congress enact. It changes the present law so as to make it more effective and make possible the enforcement of some of the provisions of the present law.

The anti-treating bill was killed by the adoption of the report of the house committee on temperance.

The two tax commission bills were made a special order for Friday at 2 p. m. in the house.

The house concurred in the senate amendments to the bill to prohibit school fraternities and repassed the bill.

In the Senate.

The senate passed the mortgage registry tax bill, with thirty-eight votes in the affirmative and fourteen in the negative. The tax is 50 cents per $100 of the amount of the mortgage, which is to be paid when the instrument is registered. Mortgages upon which the tax is not paid will not be considered valid.

The senate passed the bill providing for a state board of examiners for nurses and for the registration of professional nurses.

The woman suffrage bill was made a special order for 11 o'clock Friday morning.

The Iowa distance tariff bill was killed after long discussion. The bill came up as a special order for the afternoon session, and failed of passage by a vote of thirty-three in the negative and twenty-two in the affirmative.

Pathetic Games in Poland.

In Warsaw the school children are playing a new game called "demonstrators," in which they divide themselves into two camps—"Cossacks" and "patriots" or "demonstrators." The latter form procession and advance singing Polish melodies, whereupon they are immediately charged by the "Cossacks" and after a scuffle are driven off, leaving their "dead" and "wounded" on the ground. In St. Petersburg the school children have started a game of "bombthrowers."

Horrible Doom.

"What's the matter with Jones? He does not drink any more!"

"No, the parson told him that for every glass of whisky he drank on earth he would be compelled to drink a glass of water in the hereafter. So he quit."

"Please, sir, I wants 'arf a pound of butter and a penn'orth of cheese, and muver says she will send a shilling in when farver comes home."

"All right," replied the man.

"But," continued the child, "muver wants the change, 'cos she 'as got to put a penny in the gas meter."—London Telegraph.

GOLD MINE IMPROVES.

Shaft on Farm Is Sunk Deeper and Richer Ore Is Found.

Investigation into the report of the gold mine on the Gainey farm, near Elba, in Winona county, shows that there is good foundation for the stories that have been sent out. The first indications of gold were found on the farm some years ago, when a deep well was sunk. The well driller said the soil brought out was different than he had found anywhere else, and he believed that gold ore was in it. Mr. Gainey has since been interested in some Western copper and gold mines, and from his investigations there he was sure he had gold ore on his own farm. Recently he did some prospecting, sinking a six-foot shaft down about twelve feet. Some of the ore removed he had assayed and found it to contain gold that would run about $4 to the ton. Since then the shaft has been sunk more than thirty feet, and the looks of the ore continues to improve. Another assay is now being made, and upon it depends future operation.

INDICTS MRS. ANDERSON.

Woman Who Cashed Check on Insurance Policy Is Accused by Jury.

At the session of the grand jury at Bemidji an indictment was brought against Mrs Jennie Anderson for the cashing of a check issued on an insurance policy, the property of another Mrs. Jennie Anderson.

The rightful claimant is a resident of Bemidji, her husband dying there a year ago. She put in the proofs of death and awaited the return of the check. Instead of the check being sent to the clerk of the local lodge for delivery, the clerk of the Little Falls lodge sent it direct and it fell into the hands of the wrong Mrs. Anderson. The latter claimed she was expecting to hear from the returns on a policy she thought her husband held in the Redmen. It has developed the Redmen do not issue policies.

The grand lodge of the A. O. U. W. shortly after the circumstances of the incident were exposed, promptly issued another warrant for $2,000 for the rightful owner of the policy.

LOOKS MUCH LIKE THIEF.

Even Scar on Innocent Man Tallies in Mistaken Identification.

There are two men in the West who bear a remarkable resemblance to each other. One is a horse thief and the other is not, and the innocent one, D. Ellingsworth, has been under arrest at Winona for several days on the charge of stealing a horse at Decorah, Iowa, four years ago. He was arrested on suspicion, and a more detailed description was sent from Iowa. It tallied exactly in height, weight, features, color of hair and eyes, manner of speech, and even to a scar on one of his limbs. Finally the sheriff came from Decorah, but as he was a new man he could not confirm the identification, and the man was taken to Preston, where the thief had worked for Mr. Grattan. This gentleman said at once the wrong man had been arrested, and consequently Ellingsworth was released.

SEAT PETITION MISSING.

Exhibit That Was Before Supreme Court Cannot Be Found.

The discovery has been made that the original county seat removal petition is missing from the office of the county auditor at Red Lake Falls. Search has been made throughout the office, the vaults have been ransacked, but no trace of the missing petition or any clew to its whereabouts have been discovered. The petition was returned from St. Paul, where it formed an exhibit before the state supreme court in the case in which a decision recently was handed down. After finishing with the petition, the paper was sent to Clerk of Court Johnson of Red Lake county, who turned it over to the deputy auditor, taking a receipt therefor. The deputy auditor is certain that the paper was placed in the vault.

LARGE MARGIN FOR COMPANIES.

Insurance Risks in Minnesota Prove Profitable.

Minnesota evidently thinks that fire and tornado insurance is a good thing, judging from the figures given in the primary fire report of the state insurance commissioner for the year ending Dec. 31, 1906. According to the report fire, tornado, hail and marine insurance policies amounting to more than $816,000,000 were written by the various companies operating in the state during the year 1906. The exact amount is $816,633,132.20.

The premiums received by the mutual hail and cyclone insurance companies amount to $7,601,508.12. The total losses incurred by the various companies during the year was $4,263,032.68, the amount remaining from the premiums after the losses have been deducted being $3,338,475.44, and this amount does not include the premiums paid to the mutual hail and cyclone companies.

The total number of companies writing fire, hail, tornado and marine insurance in the state is 353, of which 118 are American companies, 4 foreign companies, 20 mutual insurance companies, 24 marine insurance companies, 9 mutual hail and cyclone insurance companies and 158 township mutual fire insurance companies.

The total amount of risks written by the American fire and tornado companies during the year amounted to $3,67,010,612, the premiums received being $2,706,585.14. The amount written by the foreign companies was $78,659,703, the premiums $1,190,928.08 and the losses $708,257.53.

The mutual fire insurance companies wrote risks amounting to $21,539,543.95, the premiums amounting to $357,195 and the losses incurred to $213,995.17, while the marine insurance companies wrote policies to the amount of $143,058,287. Their premiums were $653,510.41 and their losses $362,227.69.

The total risks written by the mutual hail and cyclone insurance companies was $4,085,375.25, of which $2,501,655.50 was on hail and $1,583,710.75 on cyclone insurance. The total losses were $44,189, $43,501.50 on the hail policies and $687.50 on the cyclone. The premiums received by these companies are not given.

The 158 township mutual fire insurance companies wrote risks during the year, amounting to $199,979,610, the premiums amounting to $368,600.41, and the losses to $227,807.55.

WILL SPEND $250,000.

Northern Pacific Has Authorized Big Expenditures at Brainerd.

Information is given out that extensive improvements to the Northern Pacific shops at Brainerd have been authorized, aggregating an expenditure of $250,000. It is said that the contract for the erection of the buildings has been awarded to a Minneapolis firm. The work is to be started this spring and carried on with the greatest possible dispatch.

The improvements, it is said, involve the construction of a new machine shop, storeroom and additions to the blacksmith shops, which will increase the working capacity of the plant to a considerable extent. Besides the expenditure of $250,000 on these buildings, it is said that the improvements include the purchase of additional machinery and equipment, which means the spending of a big sum by the company at Brainerd.

The present plant has about reached its capacity. The purchase of additional equipment by the company to take care of its heavy traffic makes it necessary that means be provided to take care of the additional repair work.

ELECTION COMPLICATION.

Alderman Receives Nine Votes, but the Council Rejects Him.

A curious complication has arisen in the city election at Fergus Falls. Ald. Straub, one of the members from the Fourth ward, resigned some time ago and entered the field for mayor. The charter provides that the city council shall elect aldermen in case of vacancies, but nine of the voters of the ward cast ballots for E. A. Brown "to fill the vacancy," at the election. They now contend that as citizens and voters they have elected an alderman at a general election, and consequently that no vacancy exists for the council to fill. Mr. Brown took the oath of office, but the council on canvassing the vote declined to declare him elected, and has referred the matter to the city attorney, who holds that the votes cast do not elect him. The council has not yet elected another man, but if it does there are likely to be legal complications.

The contract for constructing the Moscow-Riceland-Geneva ditch, the largest ever projected in the southern part of the state, was awarded to G. A. McWilliams of Walnut, Ill. The bid was 6.33 cents per cubic yard, and is about 30 per cent less than estimated by the engineers. There were many bidders and some of them were as high as 9 cents per cubic yard. It is understood that the work will be commenced as soon as the machines can be brought to Albert Lea, but the contractor will have until the autumn of 1909 to complete the work.

SARSAPARILLA TIME.

Make Your Own Sarsaparilla or Spring Blood Medicine.

Mix one-half ounce Fluid Extract Dandelion, one ounce Compound Kargon, three ounces Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla. Shake well in a bottle and take one teaspoonful after meals and again at bedtime. Any good druggist can supply these ingredients.

This is said to be a splendid Spring Blood Tonic and system renovator because of its gentle action in restoring the Kidneys to normal activity, forcing them to filter from the blood all impure matter and acids, destroying micro-organisms which produce ill health and sour blood.

Everyone should take something to cleanse the blood at this time of year, and the above simple prescription is the most highly indorsed of the hundreds of home remedies generally used.

Mix this yourself, then you will know what you are taking.

BRAVE DEED OF VOLUNTEER.

Civilian Does a Great Service in Battle to the Iron Duke.

It is not always that the information carried by the recognized aid-de-camp to and from the commanding officer in battle which is of highest value. There was a supreme moment during the battle of Waterloo when the Duke of Wellington was left absolutely alone—and that not when he was running the risk of capture by sailing through the enemy's lines. It simply meant that every galloper had gone his way, each with his message.

At this moment a stranger rode up to the duke and quietly said, "Can I be of any use, sir?" The duke took one glance at him and unhesitatingly answered: "Yes; take this pencil note to the commanding officer," pointing to a regiment in the heat of battle. The stranger took the note and galloped away with it through the thick of the fight. He delivered it, but what happened to him no man knows. The duke always declared that to be one of the most gallant deeds that had ever come under his notice. It was done without prospect of acknowledgment or reward and neither attended its successful accomplishment.—London Standard.

FIND OUT

The Kind of Food That Will Keep You Well.

The true way is to find out what is best to eat and drink, and then cultivate a taste for those things instead of poisoning ourselves with improper, indigestible food, etc.

A conservative Mass. woman writes: "I have used Grape-Nuts 5 years for the young and for the aged; in sickness and in health; at first following directions carefully, later in a variety of ways as my taste and judgment suggested.

"But its most special, personal benefit has been a substitute for meat, and served dry with cream when rheumatic troubles made it important for me to give up the 'coffee habit.'

"Served in this way with the addition of a cup of hot water and a little fruit it has been used at my morning meal for six months, during which time my health has much improved, nerves have grown steadier, and a gradual decrease in my comfort." HARLAN P. HALL.

One of the moulders of Minnesota's destiny died last Tuesday. Probably if he could have chosen the time and manner of his demise he would not have altered God's plan. He died literally "in the harness," after a half-century of service to the state. Harlan P. Hall was the Nestor of Minnesota journalism. He was one of the early editors of the old St. Paul Press, and later founded both the Dispatch and Globe. He was considered one the brightest writers and ablest newspaper managers in the country, and yet he died without a cent of tangible wealth. He lacked the ability to provide for his own needs, even though he was a tremenduous power in creating the wealth and fashioning the fame of a great commonwealth.

Hall is one the last of the early editors of Minnesota. He was kind and gentle—a sort of man that children love intuitively, and men and women reverence because of his great great generosity and innate goodness and unselfishness.

To pass or not to pass—that is the question with the Minnesota legislature.

As a last resort it is possible to achieve enduring fame by getting elected to Teddy's "Ananias Club."

NEXT Friday April 26, is Arbor and Bird day. Red Lake Falls and all other northern Minnesota towns could confer a great blessing on posterity by a proper observance of this day.

ST. PAUL is a candidate for the honor of entertaining the next national Democratic convention. It would be fitting that a Minnesota president be nominated in a Minnesota city.

The Duluth News-Tribune pays a beautiful tribute to the memory of Harlan P. Hall in these words: "Death is not always harsh. Sometimes it is gentle and kindly, coming as a grateful relief to a tired soul worn out with the battle of life. So it came to Harlan P. Hall, one of the dearest men who ever lived, known personally to more men and women in this state than is any other and beloved by them."

THE Ada Herald remarks that: "The Red Lake Falls Courier, under the management of John King, with Sam S. Haislet as local editor is a greatly improved publication and ranks foremost in Northern Minnesota journalism."

There will be no re-apportionment at the present session of the legislature. The Republican party loves northern Minnesota so dearly that it will do its utmost to prevent any more of our good people from being contaminated by the vices of the capitol city.

THE many broken promises of the Republican legislature makes us wonder if Senator Wilson wasn't more than half right when he said that platform pledges were made to fool the people and it was never intended that they should be redeemed. About next time the people will be in a mood to fool the Republican party.

THE Virginia Enterprise gets mighty near the truth when it publishes the following: "A man will play billiards half the night and pay 25 cents a game and drink 15-cent whiskey without expecting any part in the management of the saloon. But if he pays $2 per year for a newspaper—or even if he gets it on the deadhead list—he thinks he ought to have something to say as to its policy."

THE Grange, which comes as near representing the sentiment of progressive farmers as can be had, takes a stand against the free seed political graft. In his annual address the Grand Master said.

"The free distribution of seed by the government may have been defensible at the time it was established, but changed conditions now make it less than farcial. The distribution costs the government $242,000 per year and, in round numbers, as much more to carry the seed to the people to whom it is addressed, making a cost of at least $500,000 annually. The National Grange has previously taken action in opposition to a continuation of this practice and the same should be reiterated and emphasized at this session. This position does not mean that we are opposed to a discriminating seed distribution by the department of agriculture, or experiment stations, of new and valuable varieties of seed not otherwise obtainable in the general seed markets."

AN Indiana Editor, who has taken time, despite his heavy duties as a "moulder of public opinion," to keep track of his material and mental progress during the year, offers the following summary of his gains and losses: Been broke, 300 times; had money, 65: praised by the public, 6; damned by the public, 134; asked to drink, 18; refused, 0; missed prayer meetings, 52; been roasted, 431; roasted others, 52; washed the office towl, 0; missed meals, 0; taken for a preacher, 11; taken for capitalist, 0; found money, 0; taken bath, 6; delinquent subscribers paid, 27; did not pay, 436; pain in conscience, 0; got whipped, 0 whipped other fellows, 8; cash on hand at beginning of year. $1.47; cash on hand at present, 67 cents.

A Merchants State Bank Idea.

You will, I believe, agree with me when I say that wheat growing is no longer profitable in this section.

If not when—what then?

Corn, clover, cows, creameries snd a good bunch of hogs to turn your skim milk into money.

There are a few farmera in this neighborhood who are now making money out of cows and hogs.

Most of the farmers in this neighborhood can at once, if they will, own a sufficient number of high grade cows and hogs to place themselves in this money-making position.

There are very few, if any, farmers here who cannot, if they manage right, within a few years' time work themselves into this money-making position.

This bank has more than three hundred thousand dollars loaned out for itself and its clients in the counties of Red Lake and Polk, and it is therefore vitally interested in the development of this section and in the financial welfare of its farmers.

We are here to do our share towards bringing about the change from unprofitable wheat growing to the unquestionably more profitable dairy farming and hog raising. We are always glad to make loans to farmers, whose credit standing warrants it, for the purchase of high-grade dairy cows, cream separators, hogs and for the growing of the necessary feed.

If the people of this neighborhood will take hold of this proposition with the vigor and determination which a matter of such great bearing upon their prosperity deserves, they can bring about a wonderful change for the better within the next five years. Not alone a change to much more profitable farming, but also the naturally following increase in land values—an increase of probably fifty to one hundred per cent.

Think it over. Come in and talk it over.

New Form of Boycott.

The residents of the village of Plummer have invented a new boycott, says the Thief River Falls News: For some time past the business men of this village have been in an open war against Charles W. Latta, the editor and proprietor of the Pioneer, and withdrew all their patronage from the paper. As a result the Pioneer has appeared each week and although it does not contain the advertisement of any business house in Plummer, it dishes up a few hot roasts for some of the residents of that place each week. Mr. Latta also happens to be the postmaster and has a little over three years more to serve before his term of office expires. His salary depends upon the number of stamps cancelled, and in order to deprive Mr. Latta of revenue he would otherwise secure from the cancelling of stamps, the people of that place make it a point to mail all of their letters on the train, and are conducting a campaign to induce all others to do likewise. As a result the postmaster-editor is not making much money out of the office and the war goes on.

TEN NEW CITIZENS.

Applications Filed Will Be Heard on July 9.

Ten residents of Red Lake county have filed their affadavit with intention of becoming naturalized citizens of the United States, with Clerk of Court Johnson, and at the special term of the District Court to be held in this city July 9, these applications will be considers by Judge Watts and final papers issued.

The new law regarding the naturalization of aliens is considerably different from the old one, and more times is required now to secure final papers.

Heretofore aliens could appear before the Judge at any time with sufficient witnesses and receive their final papers upon the proper proof of residence, but the new order changes this very materially.

In order to receive final papers now, affidavit must be furnished before the Clerk of the Distric Court supported by two witnesses, at least ninety days prior to the date of a court term, and the names of the affidants are posted publicly until said term.

This year the special session will be held on Juls 9, and Clerk Johnson has posted a list of ten applicants who will apply for final papers on that date,

EXCHANGE ECHOES.

Fairmont Sentinel: Senator H. E. Hanson has introduced a bill giving grand and petit jurors three dollars per day instead of two dollars, their present compensation. It is said that the bill ought to pass. No farmer can afford to be taken from home in the busy season for even $3 a day, out of which of course he must pay his board.

Cannon Falls Beacon: If the "interests" are to remain in control of legislation in this state, we move that the next republican campaign be turned over to the Hennepin county combine; that it name the candidate for governor, and do the work of appointing him. Republicans will then know what to expect and what to do when they go to the polls. Governor Johnson or some other good Democrat will be elected and the blame will rest where it belongs.

THAT MENS SUPPER

Presbyterian Church Parlors Scene of Enjoyable Time Tuesday Evening.

The muchly-advertised "men's supper" for which the people have waited so long in expectancy, was given at the Presbyterian church parlors Tuesday evening of this week and proved to be all that was figured on—and then some.

Early in the winter this feast was planned, but from time to time it was postponed—generally the reason being given that the newly chefs wanted more time in which to practice the art of cooking in order that they might let the public down that much easier. (On the q.t. the COURIER has inside information to the effect that the real reason for the various postponements was the fact that up until a short time ago the women folks had persistently refused to do the cooking—and the old fellows were up against it.)

Last week the announcement was made that the supper would be given Tuesday night of this week, and naturally a large number of the townspeople turned out to see what the men could do in the line of serving supper.

The parlors were arranged with four long tables and from 5:30 until 8:30 the waiters were kept on the constant jump serving the many who desired to be fed.

The kitchen was also a scene of activity, Prof. Chamberlain, Ed. L. Healy, Chas. N. Bourdon, Sheriff Nelson, A. Cairns and several others dishing up the eatables and keeping the waiters supplied with full trays.

The kitchen committee was well selected and they all showed their adaptability for the work. The mere fact that several gallons of dish water were spilled on the floor and the rest of the boys were kept busy dodging chinaware, doesn't reflect the least discredit on Sheriff Nelson's ability as a prize dishwasher, but the amount of work to be done really necessitated some rapid handling of the dishes.

The waiting force, the reception committee and the affable cashier all conducted themselves with ease, and made the hungry populace happy with the many good things they had in store.

The local orchestra was there, and furnished sweet strains of melody while the feast was in progress, and the guests of the occasion had a most enjoyable time. The affair netted the church a neat sum, and furnished all kinds of amusement.

Regarding the rumors that are being circulated as to how the men flunked and the women folks were obliged to do the cooking, the COURIER does not believe a word of it, and knows positively that Bob Bourdon split the wood for the cooking of one of the roasts; that Gus Kankel picked over two handfuls of beans; that Prof. Chamberlain labored "several" days and nights manufacturing the chili sauce (and produced a good number, by the way); that Frank Mizen, Chas. N. Bourdon, Harry Healy, L. C. Simons, Thomas Germo, Art Zaiser, Frank Hunt, Dr. Argue and lots of others helped with the spring cleaning while the women folks were cooking up the edibles—all of which is creditable and shows that they were willing to bear their share of the work—and at the same time they were receiving valuable lessons in the culinary art that will come in handy in the future.

The men's supper was a decided success—this much is self-evident—and the people will forget all but fact that they were well fed and had a very enjoyable time—and will trust that this first attempt be followed by more along the same line.

C. F. Gray expects to leave the first of the week for Montach, Saskatchewan, near which place he will spend the summer on his claim. THE COURIER will keep him posted on Red Lake Falls happenings from now on.

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Kehoe of Middle River came down last Friday evening and are guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Con Kehoe. Friday night Mrs. Kehoe gave birth to a child, but the little one lived but a short time and was interred in the Catholic cemetery Sunday.

Crookston Journal: Congressman Steenerson has received notification that Daniel Brown of Red Lake Falls, who was a member of Co. B. first regiment Mich Vol. Eng. Mech. has received an increase of pension to $12 per month, becoming effective February 21.

Frank Jeffers came up from Minneapolis last Saturday and is spending the week with his family and many friends here. Frank has been travelling throught Wisconsin and Michigan for the Miller-Davis Printing company, of Minneapolis, and has met with great success so far in his career as a knight of the grip.

The Clearwater creamery at Lillo, eastern Red Lake county, started up for the season last week and during the week received about 1,500 pounds of cream. This is not so bad for a starter and as they have a first class buttermaker in charge it is safe to say that the run of this creamery this season will be highly gratifying to all its patrons.

CHAPTER XIV.—(CONTINUED.)

"You will not die, I bore it, and still live; and it is so much harder for me, because I have to bear it all alone. You have your religion to help you, Margie. Surely that will bear you up! I have heard all you pious people prate enough of its service in time of trouble to remember that consolation."

"Don't, Alexandrine. It is sinful to scorn God's holy religion. Yes, you are right; it will help me. God himself will help me, if I ask him. He knows how much I stand in need of it."

"I am glad you are so likely to be supported," returned the girl, half earnestly, half-contemptuously. "Are you satisfied in regard to Mr. Archer Trevlyn?"

"I will not credit it!" cried Margie, passionately. "He did not do that deed! He could not! So good, and noble, and pitiful of all suffering humanity! And beside, what motive could he have?"

"The motive was all-powerful. Has not Mr. Trevlyn, by his own confession, loved you from his youth up?"

"Yes."

"And Paul Linmere was about to become your husband. Could there be a more potent reason for Archer Trevlyn to desire Mr. Linmere's death? He was an obstacle which could be removed in no other way than by death, because you had promised your father to marry him, and you could not falsify your word. All men are weak and liable to sin; is Trevlyn any exception? Margie, I have told you frankly what I know. You can credit it or not. I leave it with you; decide it as you think best. It is eight o'clock. I will go now, for it is time for your lover to come for you."

"O, I cannot meet him—not to-night! I must have time to think—time to collect my thoughts! My head whirls so, and everything is so dark! Stay, Alexandrine, and excuse me to him. Say I have a headache—anything to quiet him. I cannot see him now! I should go mad! Let me have a night to think of it!"

Alexandrine put her hand on the soft hair of the bowed head.

"My poor Margie! it is hard for you. Hark! there is the bell. He has come. Will you not go down?"

"No, no, no! Do what you judge best, and leave me to myself and my God."

Alexandrine went out, and Margie, locking the door after her, flung herself down on the carpet and buried her face in the pillows of the sofa.

Miss Lee swept down the staircase, her dark, bright face resplendent, her bearing haughty as that of an empress. Arch was in the parlor. He looked up eagerly as the door opened, but his countenance fell when he saw that it was only Miss Lee. She greeted him cordially.

"Good evening, Mr. Trevlyn. I am deputized to receive you, and my good intentions must be accepted in place of more fervent demonstrations."

"I am happy to see you, Miss Lee. Where is Margie?"

"She is in her room, somewhat indisposed. She begged me to ask you to excuse her, as she is unable to come down, and of course cannot have the pleasure of going with you to the opera."

"Sick? Margie sick!" he exclaimed, anxiously. "What can be the matter? She was well enough three hours ago."

"O, do not be uneasy. It is nothing serious. A headache, I think. She will be well after a night's rest. Cannot I prevail on you to sit down?"

"I think not, to-night, thank you. I will call to-morrow. Give Margie my best love, and tell her how sorry I am that she is ill."

Alexandrine promised, and Mr. Trevlyn bowed himself out. She put her hand to her forehead, which seemed almost bursting with the strange weight there.

"Guilty or not guilty," she muttered, "what does it matter to me? I love him, and that is enough!"

CHAPTER XV.

THE long night passed away, as all nights, however long and dark they may be, will pass away.

Margie had not slept. She had paced her chamber until long after midnight, utterly disregarding Alexandrine, who had knocked repeatedly at her door, and at last, overcome by weariness, she had sunk down in a chair by the open window, and sat there, gazing blankly out into the night, with its purple heavens, and its glory of sparkling stars.

Nothing could have tempted Margie to have credited such a story of her lover, had it not been for the overwhelming evidence of her own senses. Ever since the night of Paul Linmere's assassination, she had at times been tortured with agonizing doubts. From the first she had been morally sure whose lips had touched her hand that night in the graveyard; she knew that no other presence than that of Archer Trevlyn had the power to influence her as she had been influenced. She knew that he had been there, though she had not seen him; and for what purpose had he been there? It was a question she had asked herself a thousand times!

There could be no doubt any longer. She was forced to that conclusion at last; her heart sinking like lead in her bosom as she came to acknowledge it. In a moment of terrible temptation, Arch Trevlyn had stained his hand with blood! And for her sake!

There was a violent warfare in her heart. Her love for Archer Trevlyn had not sprung up in a day; its growth had been slow, and it had taken deep root. Oh, how hard it was to give up the blissful dream! She thought of his early life—how it had been full of temptation—how his noble nature had been warped and perverted by the evil influences that had surrounded him and for a while the temptation was strong upon her soul to forgive him everything—to ignore all the past, and take him into her life as though the fearful story she had just listened to had been untold. Marry a murderer!

"Oh, God!" she cried in horror, as the whole extent of the truth burst upon her: "Oh, my God, pity and aid me!"

She sank down on her knees, and though her lips uttered no sound, her heart prayed as only hearts can pray when wrung with mortal suffering. Archer Trevlyn must be given up; from that there could be no appeal. Henceforth he must be to her as though he had never been. She must put him entirely out of her life—out of her thoughts—out of her sleeping and waking dreams.

But she could give him no explanation of her change of mind. She had passed her word—nay, she had sworn never to reveal aught that Miss Lee had told her, and a promise was binding. But he would not need any explanation. His own guilty conscience would tell him why he was renounced.

She took off the rose-colored dress in which she had arrayed herself to meet him, and folded it away in a drawer of her wardrobe, together with every other adornment that she had worn that night. They would always be her painful reminders of that terrible season of anguish and despair. When all were in, she shut them away from her sight, turned the key upon them, and flung it far out of the window.

Then she opened her writing desk, and took out all the little notes he had written to her, read them all over, and holding them one by one to the blaze of the lamp, watched them with a sort of stony calmness until they shrivelled and fell in ashes, black as her hopes, to the floor. Then his gifts; a few simple things. Those she did not look at; she put them hastily in a box, sealed them up, and wrote his address on the cover.

The last task was the hardest. She must write him a note, telling him that all was over between them. The gray light of a clouded morning found her making the effort. But for a long time her pen refused to move; her hand seemed powerless. She felt weak and helpless as a very infant. But it was done at last, and she read it over, wondering that she was alive to read it:

"Mr. Archer Trevlyn, Sir: Yesterday afternoon, when I last saw you, I did not think that before twenty-four hours had elapsed I should be under the necessity of inditing to you this letter. Henceforth, you and I must be as strangers. Not all the wealth and influence of the universe could tempt me to become your wife, now that my eyes are opened. I renounce you utterly and entirely, and no word or argument of yours can change me. Therefore, do not attempt to see me, for with my own consent I will never look upon your face again. I deem no explanation necessary; your own conscience will tell you why I have been forced to make this decision. I return to you with this note everything that can serve to remind me of you, and ask you to do me the favor to burn all that you may have in your possession which once was mine. Farewell, now and forever.

"MARGARET HARRISON."

There remained still something more to be done. Margie knew that Archer Trevlyn would seek her out, and demand an explanation from her own lips, and this must never be. She could not see him now; she was not certain that she could ever see him again. She dared not risk the influence his personal presence might have upon her. She must leave New York. But where should she go? She had scarcely asked the question before thought answered her.

Far away in the northern part of New Hampshire, resided old Nellie Day, the woman who had nursed her, and whom she had not seen for twelve years. Nellie was a very quiet, discreet person, and had been very warmly attached to the Harrison family. She had married late in life a worthy farmer, and giving up her situation in New York, had gone with him to the little out-of-the-way village of Lightfield. Margie had kept up a sort of desultory correspondence with her, and in every letter that the old lady wrote she had urged Margie to visit her in her country home. It had never been convenient to do so, but now this place was suggested to her at once, and to Lightfield she decided to go.

She consulted her watch. It was 5 o'clock; the train for the north, the first express, left at half past six. There would be time. She would leave all her business affairs in the hands of Mr. Farley, her legal adviser and general manager; and as to the house, the maiden aunt who resided with her could keep up the establishment until her return, if she ever did return.

She packed a few of her plainest dresses and some other indispensables in a trunk, arrayed herself in a dark traveling suit, and rang for Florine. The girl looked at her in silent amazement. Margie steadied her voice, and spoke carelessly enough.

"Florine, I have been obliged to leave home very suddenly. My preparations are all complete. I thought I would not wake you as I had so little to do. Tell Peter to have the carriage at the door at six precisely, and bring up Leo's breakfast, and a cup of hot coffee for me."

At six o'clock—having written a note to Mr Farley, and one to her aunt, giving no explanations, but merely saying she had been called away—she put on her bonnet, entered the carriage and was driven to the depot. And before nine-tenths of New York had thought of leaving their beds, she was being whirled rapidly northward, her only companion Leo, who, watchful and alert, lay curled up on the seat beside her.

CHAPTER XVI.

ARCHER TREVLYN had not slept that night. Some sense of impending evil, some demon of uneasiness oppressed him strangely. He tossed about until daybreak, then he rose, dressed himself, and went out. Everything was still on the streets except the clatter of the milk carts, and the early drays and huckster wagons. The air was damp and dense, and struck a deadly chill to the very marrow of this unseasonable wanderer. He walked a few squares, and then returned to his hotel, more oppressed than when he went out.

Did ever time move so slowly before? Would the morning never pass? He wrote some urgent letters, read the damp morning paper, without the slightest notion of contents, and went down to his breakfast, to come away again leaving it untasted. Eight o'clock. The earliest possible hour at which it would be proper to call on Miss Harrison was eleven. Three mortal hours first! How could he ever endure it? She might be very ill. She might even be dying! Archer, with the foolish inconsistency of love, magnified every evil until he was nearly beside himself with dread, lest she might be worse than Miss Lee had represented.

Nine o'clock struck; he was walking the floor in a state of nervous excitement which would have forced him ere long to have broken all rules of etiquette and taken his way to Harrison House, had not fate saved him the necessity.

A waiter entered, and brought in a letter and a package. He snatched them both, and saw they were directed in Margie's handwriting. For a moment his heart stood still with a deadly fear. Great drops of perspiration covered his forehead, and he dropped letter and package to the floor. Why was she writing to him when she must expect to see him in a few hours? And that package! What did it contain?

He picked it up, and tore off the wrappings. The betrothal ring rolled out and fell with a hollow sound on the floor. The ring he had put upon her finger—the ring he had seen her kiss more than once! He looked over the contents of the box hurriedly; every little thing he had ever given her was there, even to a bunch of faded violets!

But the letter? He had almost forgotten it, in pondering over the dread significance of the return of his presents. He took it up and broke the seal with slow deliberation. It would not tell him any news, but it might contain an explanation. His face grew pale as ashes as he read, and he put his hand to his heart, as though he had received a blow there. Twice he read it through, and at the last reading he seemed to realize its dread portent.

A SOCIAL RECREATION.

Entirely New Method by a Few Friends Tired of Dancing.

Women who are in straits for unique methods of entertaining might do worse than to listen here, says the Philadelphia Press. The scene is laid in Philadelphia and the action in all its detail transpired in the heart of this city, so proverbially far-famed for the slowness of its social gait and limitations of its pleasure-going capacities. There was a certain club of "blase" bachelors whose average age was probably about 18. Those worn-out veterans, who already know all there is to know, determined to give a dinner, which should be distinctly unique, so for weeks the prime movers thereof cast about them for the happy thought which would insure the success of their "feed." At last they found it. Then they bid some choice and favored brother spirits to the feast, demanding of them only one thing—i. e., that each guest should bring with him something he had stolen. The night arrived and with it the company, and then the scheme upon which the novelty of the entertainment depended was put into execution. As each man (?) took his place he was asked to produce his transferred contribution. Immediately forth from every pocket came a spoon. It is safe to say that all the prominent eating-houses of the city were represented in that collection of souvenirs, the favorites being in the lead, of course. One ice-cream soda stand was all unwittingly poorer by six of these donated spoons. And the youths for the time being forgot their ennui and were "boys again."

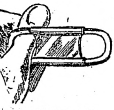
Let friendship creep gently to a height; if it rush to it it may soon run out of breath.

LOCKS THE THUMBS TOGETHER.

A Newly Invented "Thumb Cuff" That Supersedes Handcuffs.

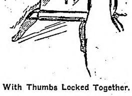
The newest invention in things for holding prisoners is a "thumb cuff." It is the size of a watch and weighs three ounces and may be carried in the waistcoat pocket. Police officers say it will displace the handcuff, which has been used on prisoners so many years.

The thumb cuff is the invention of a man in Chicago. It is made to clasp the thumbs just below the middle joint. It is so shaped that the thumbs may be locked securely together and, unless a key is used, the lock cannot be taken off without tearing away a thumb. An officer of the law can carry enough thumb cuffs in his pocket to securely fasten a string of 50 prisoners. If he was to try to carry enough handcuffs for this many men he would be carrying something like 15 pounds of steel.



The New "Thumb Cuff."

There is danger in handcuffs. Prisoners have been known to knock officers senseless with the cuffs on their wrists. It is impossible to hurt anyone with this new invention. So long as a prisoner is peaceable the thumb cuff will not injure him. But if he goes to swinging his arms he'll feel it pressing into the bone.



With Thumbs Locked Together.

CAT IN LOVE WITH DOLL.

Chicago Animal Chooses Peculiar Object for Affection.

Did you ever see a cat in love with a doll? Probably not.

Cats have been known to fall in "love" with chickens, and even hatch eggs and bring up feathered children, but a cat in love with a cold, motionless doll—that is something entirely new.

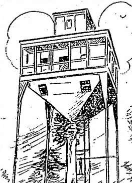
Yet a Chicago woman, Mrs. John H. Keith, 1380 Sheridan road, has just such a cat.

The cat is one of the male persuasion, and is a handsome Angora, with a big, fluffy tail, a winner of honors at cat shows, and of a color that is best described by his name—Peach.

Peach's sweetheart is a doll that Mrs. Keith used to play with when she was a little girl. It is not an ordinary doll, because it is as big as a small baby, and instead of having the perishable head which is wont to decorate the sawdust body nowadays, has a head of porcelain. The doll is a brunette, having dark hair (of porcelain) and big blue eyes. Then, too, it is lavishly dressed, and withal attractive.

Peach fell in love as suddenly as the proverbial swain.

LIVING ON A TREE TOP.



This house, which is situated near the Escondidi river, Yucatan, was built in the manner shown, on the top of an ibo tree 70 feet from the ground, in order that its owner might be above the malarial zone, and also safe from wild beasts, snakes, mosquitoes and scorpions.

Clocks Stopped at Time of Death.

A remarkable incident recently happened at Kirkcolm, Scotland, in connection with the drowning of two young fishermen at sea. Two brothers, John and David Thomson, saved up a sum of £50, and purchased a vessel for fishing in Lochryan. They set out a few days ago, but in a fierce gale which prevailed in the evening they were wrecked off the Argyllshire coast and drowned. In the father's house in Kirkcolm village three clocks all stopped at six o'clock on the night in question. None of the timekeepers were run down, and went all right when once more set going.

HONEST MEDICINE

TRY DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS FOR STOMACH TROUBLE.

Convincing Evidence Supported by a Guarantee That Must Convince The Most Skeptical.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are a doctor's prescription, used by an eminent practitioner, and for nearly a generation known as a reliable household remedy throughout the United States. Needless to say, no advertised medicine could retain popular favor for so long a period without having great merit and it is the invaluable curative properties of the pills that have made them a standard remedy in every civilized country in the world. Added to this is the absolute guarantee that the pills contain no harmful drug, opiate, narcotic or stimulant. A recent evidence of their efficacy is found in the statement of Mrs. N. B. Whitley, of Boxley, Ark., who says:

"I had suffered for a good many years from stomach trouble. For a long time I was subject to bad spells of faintness and lack of breath accompanied by an indescribable feeling that seemed to start in my stomach. Whenever I was a little run-down or over-tired, these spells would come on. They occurred frequently but did not last very long.

"I was confined to my bed for ten weeks one time and the doctor pronounced my trouble chronic inflammation of the stomach and bowels. Since that time I have been subject to the fainting spells and at other times to fluttering of the heart and a feeling as though I was smothering. My general health was very bad and I was weak and trembling.

"I had seen Dr. Williams' Pink Pills mentioned in the newspapers and decided to try them. When I began taking the pills I was so run-down in strength that I could hardly do any housework. Now I could walk ten miles if necessary. Both my husband and myself think Dr. Williams' Pink Pills the best medicine made and we always recommend the pills to our friends."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills actually make new blood and give strength and tone to every part of the body. They have cured serious disorders of the blood and nerves, such as rheumatism, sciatica, anæmia, nervousness, headaches, partial paralysis, locomotor ataxia, St. Vitus' dance and many forms of weakness in either sex. They are sold by all druggists or will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

STOLE A COURT ROOM CLOCK.

Coolie's Trick in Hongkong a Story Not Told to Strangers.

"There is one story of Hongkong that has never been told in this country," said the man from the tropics, "and I guess that it's because Hongkong has always been ashamed to let the story get out. For if ever the laugh was on the whole community, it settled upon that damp village the time the coolies went to the court house to fix the clock.

"Hongkong prides itself on its municipal buildings, particularly upon the hall of justice. Over on the wall, opposite where the justice's bench is, there used to be a fine marble clock, an immense affair.

"Whenever tourists visited the hall of justice the big sikh at the entrance used to call particular attention to that marble clock. It was his pride and one of his chief joys of duty was to wind it every week.

"Not very long ago when court was sitting two Chinese coolies, dressed as mechanics, presented themselves before the door of the court room. They carried a ten-foot ladder between them. The sikh stopped them.

"'Alle li-fixum clock pidgin,' said one of the coolies, and the big Indian admitted them.

"They went right over to the wall under the clock, hoisted their ladder noiselessly and with due deference to the majesty of the law, represented by the justice on his woolsack across the room, took that marble clock down from its fastenings. Then they trotted out of the court room, one carrying the clock and the other shouldering the ladder.

"The reason why Hongkong will never tell the story on itself is that no more was ever seen either of the coolies or the marble clock."

CARE OF THE SICK ROOM.

Above All Things the Walls Should Be Kept Dry.

When the bedroom becomes a sick room there is an added reason why extreme precautions should be used to keep the room in a thoroughly sanitary condition.

Above all things, the bedroom should never be damp. It should be nice and dry, always warm and comfortable in winter, cool and airy in summer, and bright and sunny some parts of the day.

If there is any suspicion of dampness in a bedroom it is probably due, if there is wallpaper on the wall, to the absorption of water by the paper which frequently acts as a blotting paper and holds quantities of water in it.

The use of wallpaper on walls is to be deplored; it means disease, ill health and unhappiness. It is frequently the cause of lung trouble, not only because of its dampness but also because of its power to retain infection of many kinds.

The desired method of treating a bedroom wall is to tint it for the alabastined wall is a perfect wall. It never flakes off, chips or peels. It absorbs moisture and expels it, it opens the pores of the plaster and makes a room livable and breathable.

The floor in the bedroom should have light, cleanable, dainty rugs that can be easily shaken and a floor that is thoroughly oiled or varnished, that will not absorb moisture. The cracks in the floor should be thoroughly filled and covered. Woodwork in the bedroom should be attended to carefully, window sills should be thoroughly varnished or waxed, and the window casings kept in perfect order. The doors should be wiped off frequently as also should be all the standing woodwork in the bedroom, as the presence of dust on woodwork is a menace to health as well as an evidence of poor housekeeping.

The Limit.

A rich man out in the suburbs who owns a large place has among the many people employed to keep it in shape an Irishman of whom he is particularly fond, on account of his unconscious wit. This Irishman is something of a hard drinker, and, as his income is limited, he is more particular as regards the quantity than the quality of his liquids. The other day the employer, who had been awaiting a good opportunity, remarked in a kind tone, as the closing sentence of a friendly lecture:

"Now, Pat, how long do you think you can keep on drinking this cheap whisky?"

To which Pat instantly replied:

"All my life if it doesn't kill me."

Recognized Real Power.

Here is an anecdote about Mr. Cassatt hitherto unpublished. He was walking out to his home in Rittenhouse square with one of the directors.

"That's a very fine place you have there, Mr. Cassatt," said the director, surveying the mansion of the president.

"Yes," replied Mr. Cassatt, with doubtful appreciation, "but I would rather live in the country."

"Then why don't you?"

Mr. Cassatt looked at his friend very soberly and asked:

"Aren't you married?"

Chile After Jap Immigrants.

In Chile, at any rate, the Japanese immigrant is made welcome. The Chilean government offers considerable inducements to agricultural and fishing immigrants. Forty acres of rich land are given outright to each settler; twenty more to each son 18 years old or more; a yoke of oxen, a set of farm implements and $15 a month in cash for the first year. This is regarded as an excellent inducement to the Japanese farmer to leave his little farm of something less than an acre and go to Chile.

The Greatest Opera Singers and the Greatest Auditorium

The people of the Northwest are particularly favored this spring by a combination never before equalled.

Mr. Heinrich Conried brings to St. Paul his entire company of grand opera singers to sing in the new auditorium. It is not necessary to mention anything more than the names of some of the singers to demonstrate the quality of the company, and when we say that Caruso, Burgstaller, Scotti, Van Rooy, Eames, Fremstad, Farrar and Abbott will sing, we have said that the world's greatest singers will appear in St. Paul.

The Auditorium.

The Pioneer Press of last Sunday says:

"An audience of more than 3,000 people gathered last night in St. Paul's new Auditorium to hear the Symphony orchestra and see the vast convention hall transformed into a theater as beautiful and as well proportioned as any theater in America. The spectacle was one long to be remembered. While auditoriums may be built in the future with similar accomplishments, the fact remains that last night's exposition of the elasticity of St. Paul's Auditorium was the very first event of the kind in history.

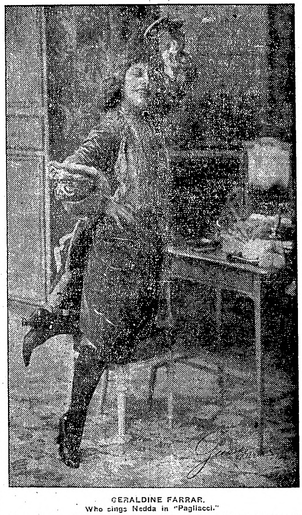
Movable Boxes.

"At a signal from A. H. Stem, the architect of the building, the electric motor, concealed from view, was started, and the cables attached to either of the sixty-ton masses of steel which go to make up the movable boxes tightened. Each side of the house began moving toward the center, slowly, but surely, the ends of the boxes nearer the stage moving in graceful curves, the end further from the stage remaining stationary. Where the proscenium sides were in place the spectators realized that instead of sitting in one end of a big convention hall they were sitting in a theater, with the stage, while looking small, yet having It has been remarked that there is a proscenium opening of sixty feet and a depth in proportion.

not a poor seat in the entire building, and this was demonstrated last night, for go where wou would in the house not an echo was discernible; the softest notes of the orchestra reached every ear.

With such singers and such a theater it is no wonder that so many people of the Northwest are sending in mail orders for the entire season. Mrs. Nettie Snyder, the local manager, reports the largest out-of-town mail orders of any operatic event ever produced in the city. She says: "It seems as though the whole country was coming in to hear the operas. There will be a special train from Winnipeg and points in the northern part of the state and many people are coming from Winona and Southern Minnesota.

Mrs. Snyder's address is "The Fredric," St. Paul, and mail orders should be addressed there.



GERALDINE FARRAR.
Who sings Nedda in "Pagliacci."

Mme. Farrar's philosophy is, "Have your career, and get it over with, if your voice goes, and have time for something else." She says she has made her mother promise to poison her if she cannot keep her off the stage by any other means when she grows old.

Her Debut in Boston.

Geraldine Farrar, when she sang Marguerite in the Metropolitan Opera Company's opening performance of "Faust" at the Boston Theater, drew a greater crowd than even Patti in the zenith of her career was ever able to attract. The excitement attending the Melrose soprano's first appearance here, since she went abroad to study seven years ago, and the royal welcome she received, are unprecedented in the annals of music and the drama in this city.

As early as six o'clock in the morning people began to form in line, to wait a whole day for the sale of admission tickets in the evening. There was no hope of securing seats, but such was the eagerness of the crowds to hear Miss Farrar that they were willing to expose themselves to the utmost degree of exhaustion to attain their desire. The theater has a seating capacity of 3,172, but it was estimated that there were 4,500 people inside after the curtain rose and that between two and three thousand were turned away.

The audience did not recognize Miss Farrar when she appeared in the vision to Faust, but an overwhelming outburst of applause greeted her when she unostentatiously joined the village people in the Kermess, and after the garden scene she received a still greater ovation and a profusion of floral gifts.

"The voice proved to be somewhat light but of excellent carrying quality," writers Louis C. Elson in the Advertiser. "The 'Jewel Song' was not given with Melba's coloratura, but there was a freshness and sympathetic quality to all Miss Farrar's work that gave it an indescribable charm, a charm of purity and simplicity that one very seldom gets in an operatic performance. Her acting was wonderfully genuine. Her Boston debut was a triumph."

To Be Sung in St. Paul.

"Tannhauser," Tuesday night, April 23; Burgstaller as Tannhauser, Mme. Eames as Elizabeth and Olive Fremstad as Venus.

"Hansel und Gretel" and "Paglacci," Wednesday (April 24) matinee; Mme. Mattfield and Herr Goritz in the first; Scotti and Geraldine Farrar in the second.

"La Boheme," the gem of the operatic season, Wednesday (April 24) night; Caruso as Rudolfo and Mme. Bessie Abbott as Mimi.

Coal Dealer's Chivalry.

Senator Tillman was attacking an offender who had pleaded a hypocritical and false excuse.

"Why," he cried, "the man is worse than the rich coal dealer who said to his weigh clerk during a blizzard:

"'Jim, make that ton of coal for Mrs. Smith 250 pounds short. She is a poor delicate widow and she will have to carry all of it up two steep flights of stairs. I don't want her to overtax her strength.'"—Washington Star.

No Relief for the Actress.

London actresses are indignant at a recent judicial decision which means that any photographer can use the head of an actress in juxtaposition with any kind of a body and sell the resulting picture to the public. The complainant was a Miss Gertie Miller, who objected to be represented in decidedly scanty attire and as creeping out of an eggshell. But the judge held that this is a decollete age and that the lady must put up with the caricature as best she may.

Women Avoid Operations

When a woman suffering from female trouble is told that an operation is necessary, it, of course, frightens her.

The very thought of the hospital, the operating table and the knife strikes terror to her heart.

It is quite true that these troubles may reach a stage where an operation is the only resource, but a great many women have been cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound after an operation has been decided upon as the only cure. The strongest and most grateful statements possible to make come from women who by taking

MISS ROSE MOORE

made from native roots and herbs, have escaped serious operations, as evidenced by Miss Rose Moore's case, of 307 W. 26th St., N.Y. She writes:—

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has cured me of the very worst form of female trouble and I wish to express to you my deepest gratitude. I suffered intensely for two years so that I was unable to attend to my duties and was a burden to my family. I doctored and doctored with only temporary relief and constantly objecting to an operation which I was advised to undergo. I decided to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; it cured me of the terrible trouble and I am now in better health than I have been for many years."

This and other such cases should encourage every woman to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound before she submits to an operation.

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation to Women

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. From the symptoms given, the trouble may be located and the quickest and surest way of recovery advised.

OLD SORES FED AND KEPT OPEN
BY IMPURITIES IN THE BLOOD

Whenever a sore refuses to heal it is because the blood is not pure and healthy, as it should be, but is infected with poisonous germs or some old blood taint which has corrupted and polluted the circulation. Those most usually afflicted with old sores are persons who have reached or passed middle life. The vitality of the blood and strength of the system have naturally begun to decline, and the poisonous germs which have accumulated because of a sluggish and inactive condition of the system, or some hereditary taint which has hitherto been held in check, now force an outlet on the face, arms, legs or other part of the body. The place grows red and angry, festers and eats into the surrounding tissue until it becomes a chronic and stubborn ulcer, fed and kept open by the impurities with which the blood is saturated. Nothing is more trying and disagreeable than a stubborn, non-healing sore. The very fact that it resists ordinary remedies and treatments is good reason for suspicion; the same germ-producing cancerous ulcers is back of every old sore, and especially is this true if the trouble is an inherited one. Washes, salves, nor indeed anything else, applied directly to the sore, can do any permanent good; neither will removing the sore with caustic plasters or the surgeon's knife make a lasting cure. If every particle of the diseased flesh were taken away another sore would come, because the trouble is in the blood, and the BLOOD CANNOT BE CUT AWAY. The cure must come by a thorough cleansing of the blood. In S. S. S. will be found a remedy for sores and ulcers of every kind. It is an unequalled blood purifier—one that goes directly into the circulation and promptly cleanses it of all poisons and taints. It gets down to the very bottom of the trouble and forces out every trace of impurity and makes a complete and lasting cure. S. S. S. changes the quality of the blood so that instead of feeding the diseased parts with impurities, it nourishes the irritated, inflamed flesh with healthy blood. Then the sore begins to heal, new flesh is formed, all pain and inflammation leaves, the place scabs over, and when S. S. S. has purified the blood the sore is permanently cured. S. S. S. is for sale at all first class drug stores. Write for our special book on sores and ulcers and any other medical advice you desire. We make no charge for the book or advice.

I was afflicted with a sore on my face of four years' standing. It was a small pimple at first but it gradually grew larger and worse in every way until I became alarmed about it and consulted several physicians. They all treated me but the sore continued to grow worse. I saw S. S. S. advertised and commenced its use and after taking it a while I was completely cured. My blood is now pure and healthy from the effect of S. S. S., and there has not been any sign of the sore since S. S. S. cured it.

Recipe for Parents.

You remember the old-fashioned woman who, when she heard her young son swearing, or using naughty words, washed his mouth in soap suds. There is an Atchison boy who could not be reformed in this way, so his father took him in hand. Every day his father called him in, and said: "Now, your mother objects to those naughty words you use, but I, being a man, like them. Go over the list for me." The boy promptly complied at first, but in a few days he tired of the words, and has now given up his list entirely.—Atchison Globe.

Gunning for Cats and Dogs.

Now that the trees are bare in the park it is easy to see the figure of a man in inconspicuous clothes who carries a rifle and prowls quietly about the wilder portions. He is appointed by the authorities to hunt down dogs and cats that may have strayed there. Some people wonder at the sound of shots in the peaceful park; others know that it is only the quiet man at work.

Baroness Is a "Fellow."

The latest "fellow" of the Royal Botanic Society of England is Baroness Von Eckhardstein, who for years has devoted herself to the study of botany and is now a recognized authority on certain phases of plant life. The baroness, who is a daughter of the late Sir Blundell Maple, spends most of her time in the country following her favorite hobby.

Shears and Sawbuck.

Sears and Sawbuck kept a store
Such as never was before.
City folks they would'nt sell,
Fetched their money—but by jing
Couldn't buy a blessed thing;
Couldn't meet 'em face to face
And then sell' em with good grace.

Country trade was what they sought.
Folks who'd pay for what they bought
'Fore they saw it hide or tail.
They sent catalogues by mail
Out to every blessed one
Getting mail by Possum Run.
We sat up at night and read
When we'd orter been in bed.

Book was 'bout as big as sin—
Had a lot of pictures in,
Had a list of merchandise
Every kind and ev'ry size.

Givin' prices that they swore
Knocked out ev'ry country store.
Looked as straight and seemed so true
I bit at—Jim did too

Jim's my neighbor 'cross the way—
Best man ever worked in hay,
Just let him top off a stack,
Sheds rain like a turtle's back.
Pleasure jist to see him work,
Never knew ol' Jim to shirk;
Swings a scythe like it was play—
Love to watch him in the hay.

Well, we, like a pair of fools,
Sent off—got some havin' tools,
Jim got harness and a plow,
I a range,—I see it now;
Darn the thing, it was so light
Used it for a torch one night,
Throwed the damn thing in the yard—
Use it now for rendering lard.

'Fore Jim used the plow an hour
Found the blamed thing wouldn't scour;
Tried his harness—broke a tug—
Sought for solace in his jug—
In the cooler all that night
Jim reflected on his plight;
In the morning Richard Stout,
Hardware merchant, bailed him out

Jim said after that he'd stick
Close as bark to good 'ol Dick;
Since he left the Possum jail
Says he won't buy goods by mail.
Says Dick's cheaper anyhow
Might have saved some on the plow.
On the other goods some more
At his old friends hardware store.

Jim says, "We cant sell no truck
To sich folk as Shears Sawbuck.
These will take our cash away,
But wont buy our corn or hay."
That seemed purty strange to me,
So I told ol' Jim I'd see—
So I wrote to them them that night
Jist to see it Jim was right.

Ast'em "what they paid for oats?
Could they use some likely shoats?
Had about four tons of hay
I could ship them right away.
Could I furnish Mr. Shears
With his family roastin' ears?
Also would my friend Sawbuck
Buy some of my garden truck?"

Answer came one summer day
Said they "Couldn't use our hay,
Couldn't use our oats or shoats,
Didn't like our Billy goats.
When they needed truck to eat
Bought it down on Water street—
Sorry but they must refuse
Anything but cash to use."

I sat down and wrote 'em then:
"Hate to trouble you again,
But I want to thank you sirs,
For your bunch of cockle burrs.
If you love your feller man,
Do him, good sirs, when you can—
While our merchant's sweetly sleep
Shears and Sawbuck shear your sheep."

Cot Made For Travel.

The traveler who loves a clean and easy bed will appreciate the portable cot, a recent invention. Made to fit into a suit case, it may be used on a thousand and one occasions: anywhere, in fact, where a couch or bed is appropriate. As a safeguard against disease we suggest the daily use of golden grain belt beer. It is brewed from the best of nature products and should go into the home as a health-maker. Fell On Her Brother.

"You ought to have seen me," said the vivacious young lady, who had fust come to town, to the young minister. I had just got on my skates and made a start when I came down on my—

"Maggie!" exclaimed her mother.

What? Oh, it was so funny! One of the skates went one way, and other'n tother way and I came down on my—

"Margaret" reprovingly spoke her father.

Well, what? They scooted from under me and down I came plump on my—"

"Margaret!", yelled out both parents.

"On my brother who held me by the hand, and I liked to have smashed him Now whats the matter?"

The girl's mother emerged from behind the coffee pot, a sigh of relief escaped the young minister, and the old gentleman very adroitly turned the conversation on the subject of the late election.—Exchange.

For Thin, Poor Blood

You can trust a medicine tested 60 years! Sixty years of experience, think of that! Experience with Ayer's Sarsaparilla; the original Sarsaparilla; the Sarsaparilla the doctors endorse for thin blood, weak nerves, general debility.

But even this grand old medicine cannot do its best work if the liver is inactive and the bowels constipated. For the best possible results, you should take laxative doses of Ayer's Pills while taking the Sarsaparilla.

Constipation

Baked sweet apples, with some people, bring prompt relief for Constipation. With others, coarse all-wheat bread will have the same effect. Nature undoubtedly has a vegetable remedy to relieve every ailment known to man, if physicians can but find Nature's way to health. And this is strikingly true with regard to Constipation.

The bark of a certain tree in California—Cascara Sagrada—offers a most excellent aid to this end. But, combined with Egyptian Senna, Slippery Elm Bark, Solid Extract of Prunes, etc., this same Cascara bark is given its greatest possible power to correct constipation. A toothsome Candy Tablet, called Lax-ets, is now made at the Dr. Shoop Laboratories, from this ingenuous and most effective prescription. Its effect on Constipation, Billiousness, Sour Stomach, Bad Breath, Sallow Complexion, etc., is indeed prompt and satisfying.

No griping, no unpleasant after effects are experienced, and Lax-ets are put up in beautiful lithographed metal boxes at 5 cents and 25 cents per box.

CASH FOR BRIDGES

Red Lake County Fares Well In Omnibus Bill In Legislature.

St. Paul, Apr. 25.

(Special to the Courier)

In omnibus bill Red Lake county gets the following amounts for bridges: Thief River Falls, $1200; Deer Park, $500; Garnes, $500; Highlanding, $700; Emardville, $700.

From the above message it will be seen that Red Lake county fared exceptionally well in the matter of appropriations for bridge building, and the residents of the country out east have reason to feel good towards the work done in their behalf by the citizens of Red Lake Falls.

Early in the winter Thief River Falls had several men at the capitol lobbying for a $4,000 appropriation to build a bridge at Thief River Falls, and not one cent was asked for the balance of the county.

Several of the east towns needed the aid badly, and on their behalf the matter was taken up by citizens here and the greedy Thief River was cut down to $1200, the balance of a very substantial appropriation going to the towns that needed it.

Thief River Falls wanted to hog the whole appropriation for their own use and would have succeeded had it not been for the residents here, who believed that the eastern part of the county needed the aid fully as bad as did the wonderful city further north.

The moral is plain, isn't it dear reader?

FACTORY IS RUNNING.

Paranteau Bros. Start up For Year's Work.

Paranteau Bros., the popular Terrebonne cheese makers, started up their factory last week, and report a very flattering business so far. The receipts of milk have been extra good for this early in the season, and indications point to a big year for the Terrebonne factory.

Paranteau Bros. have also leased the creamery at Mentor for this year and will operate both plants. This creamery is accorded a good patronage, and as there no better creamery men in this section than the boys who will operate it this year, there is no question as to the success of their venture.

Joseph Paranteau, who handles the cheese making work at Terrebonne, has an enviable reputation as a star cheese maker, and the people of southern Red Lake county are always glad to see him meet the success he deserves.

FARMERS HAVE POWER TO CHECK COUNTY SEAT SCRAP

By Refusing to Sign Any Further Petition for the Removal of the County Seat From One Place to Another They Can Bring the Drawn Out Fight to an Abrupt Halt.

Accordinng to notices published in the Thief River papers, the citizens of the up-river town will on May 1 begin the circulation of another petition asking that the county seat of Red Lake county be moved from Red Lake Falls to Thief River Falls.

In other words, this means that after over two years of continued fighting over the county seat question, the thing is to be commenced all over again, and the money, time, and energy that has necessarily been spent by both sides has been "cast upon the desert air"—as it were.

To the people of Red Lake county generally this means far more than appears at first glance, and without regard to the leanings of the individual it is nothing more than a decided detriment and handicap to every voter and property owner within the confines of the county, and summed down to a conclusion, is a direct notice that Red Lake county must stand still for some time to come in the matter of increase in land values and general prosperity.

Something over two years ago a few Thief River Falls people conceived the idea of attempting to secure the county seat of Red Lake county, and to this end commenced the circulation of a petition asking for the removal of the seat of government. At an enormous expense and through representations that were misunderstood by the people outside the cities this petition was signed by a sufficient number of people to warrant Thief River Falls in following up the fight—and what the outcome has been is a matter of too general knowledge to need repeating here.

It is the history of all contests of this sort in this and other states, that a battle of legal authority must be gone through before any results can be obtained, and what has been the result of the long drawn out legal contest is also well known to all.

During this time there has been the bitterest of feeling existant between the two towns, and the turmoil caused has affected all parts of the county, and made a general dissatisfactisn with conditions. Naturally a fight of this sort has not been kept secret, and today Red Lake county is looked at askance by investors and homeseekers on account of the troubles within her borders. People who are looking for a place to make a home and bring up their families can justly be expected to hesitate before casting their lot in a county where trouble of this sort exists and promises to exist for all time to come, and in this way it is plain to be seen where the county seat scrap has meant real loss and worked more than a momentary hardship upon the county at large, and the general prosperity thereof.

Summed up in a nutshell, what is it all for? Surely it is not questioned by any one that the county is as well off with the county seat at Red Lake Falls as it would be were Thief River be the seat of government; there is no doubt in the mind of any fair-minded person but what the people would be just as contented with the county seat settled at Red Lake Falls for all time to come as they would were it moved to Thief River. And further, there is not a particle of question that all the people here now would be far better off were the county seat scrap dropped now and forever, and the money and energy required to carry it on devoted to the general advancement of the county's welfare. We all know—and there is not a Thief Riverite but what will admit—that Red Lake county could offer better inducements to the seeker after a home and the investor were we united as one people for the general good of the community.

This then is where the matter stands, and the farmers of Red Lake county have it within their power to stop the fight right now for all time to come. If every man who is approached by Thief River committees will refuse absolutely to sign any further petition or have anything whatever to do with the county seat removal contest henceforth, then the thing will be settled quick and to the good of all. The removal of the county seat now would mean an added expense to every taxpayer without any gain. It would mean the throwing away of $16,006 invested In in county property at present, besides the heavy cost of moving the records and other property that could be moved. It would mean further the bonding of the county in a large amount at some not distant date for an expensive set of county buildings at Thief River Falls—and in the end there is nothing gained.

The present county buildings have answered the needs of the county thus far and will continue to do so for years to come, and it does not seem logical, looked at in the right light, for the people to throw away all they have got now and start all over again.

The fact cannot be dodged that if the new Thief River petition is signed by the required number of voters another lengthy legal battle will result, with the incident expense to the taxpayers, and should the outcome be the same as it has been in other counties in Minnesota, the proposition will hang on for several years to come, and while other counties of the valley are enjoying a full measure of prosperity, Red Lake county will stand still, the homeseeker leaving it strictly alone on account of its "internal troubles."

The time is opportune to put a stop to all this and unite for the greater Red Lake county. The farmers have the matter in their own hands, as a strict refusal to sign any petition from now henceforth will mean a new era of prosperity to each and all.

COX GETS $7.74.

Historical Claim Settled By The Government.

Red Lake Falls friends of "Bill" Cox will be pleased to read the following article from the San Francisco Call of April 9:

"After more than a century had passed since the original claim was made William S. Cox of 953 Market street has received from the estate of James S. Cox, his great grand father, and a Revolutionary war figure, the sum of $7.74, representing his share of an allowance made by the United States Government on account of the French spoliation claims. The younger Cox's share came in the form of a check from John L. Cox and Howard W. Page, administrators of James S. Cox's estate, which had been kept alive more than 100 years in order that his descendents might carry on the contest with the United States government.

Cox has had the check framed and will preserve it as a unique reminder of the early history of the United States, as well as a testimonial that republics are not necessarily ungrateful.

The Cox claim rested upon damages inflicted upon the ship Concord and brig Hannah by French war vessels in reprisal between 1793 and 1800 for alleged violation of treaty pledges by the United States against France. Cox was a merchant, who, with many others, had suffered seriously by the depredations."

The article was headed by an excellent likeness of the genial Cox which THE COURIER wishes it could reproduce, that the boys (who said girls, too) here could see that he has lost none of his good looks since leaving the northern climate.

FIRE LADDIES BUSY

Begin Preparations In Earnest For the Coming Fire Tournament.

The local fire department held a special meeting at the council rooms Sunday afternoon, and talked over some pending tournament matters.

The question of the erection of a grand stand at the grounds was discussed, and Dan J. Doran was given the contract to erect it. The stand will be 100 feet long and 30 feet deep and will seat a large number of people. It will be so arranged that the occupants can see the races and ball games without moving from their seats, and will be built to stand the test.

But two short months remain before the tournament time, and the firemen will be as busy as bees from this time henceforth. It is planned to hold the firemen's races and ball games on the Buse property in the west part of town, and a fine track will be made for the racing. The committee in charge of the grounds plan on commencing next week to fence in the ground and begin the work of breaking the track. A woven wire fence will be built around the grounds, and everything will be arranged in first class shape. Work on the grandstand will also be commenced shortly.

There is a whole lot of work ahead of the various committees from now on, which must be attended to as fast as possible and the boys should be given all the aid possible by the citizens.

Red Lake Falls will entertain the largest crowd in her history during this June week, and nothing will be left undone to give them the time of their lives while they are here.

NOT ALL SUNSHINE.

Settlers Enroute to New Homes in Canada are Snowbound.

Thief River News: "Billy" Knight arrived in the city Tuesday evening from Prince Albert, where he spent the winter working in the woods. The railroads up in that section are all tied up owing to the numerous snow storms of late and it took Mr. Knight sixteen days to make the the trip from Prince Albert to this city. At Regina he reports that there are 1500 carloads of stock, farm machinery and household goods on the side tracks belonging to settlers who are enroute to the Canadian Northwest to make their future homes.

Many of these had to be tied up for over a month and restaurants and hotels are reaping a big harvest and charging exhorbitant prices for meals. Many of the new settlers had spent most of their cash and wishing they had never started for the Canadian Northwest.

$25,000 PACKAGE IS RECOVERED

EXPRESS ROBBER CONFESSES AND ASSISTS IN RECOVERING MONEY.

CALLS IT A DRUNKEN FREAK

SAYS HE WILL PLEAD GUILTY IN COURT AND TAKE HIS MEDICINE.

St. Paul, April 20.—The police yesterday morning recovered all the $25,000 stolen Tuesday night from the union depot office of the Northern Express company, when Clerk Fred Zimmerman was forced to open the safe. John Gunderson, who was arrested soon after the hold-up, confessed yesterday morning, and told where he hid the money. He went with the police and officers of the express company and the entire amount was found.

Will Plead Guilty.

"I am going to plead guilty when they take me into court," said Gunderson last night at the central station. "I am going to take my medicine. There's nothing else to do. There is nobody else to blame."

Gunderson insists that he did not mean to hold up the express office when he went there; that it was not even in his mind when he sent the porter for the whisky. He was drunk, he says, and the robbery was a drunken freak.

Most of the money was hidden in places near the Jackson street shops of the Great Northern. Gunderson broke the packages and distributed the $25,000 among four places. Yesterday Gunderson led the police to the places where he had hidden the money and assisted them in recovering it.

Tells All About It.

Gunderson in his confession told essentially the same story of the hold-up as that told by Fred Zimmerman. He said that he went to the union depot office of the express company. He knew the clerks because, until a few days previously, he had been in the employ of the company. He spent about an hour there talking to the clerks, until all were gone except Zimmerman and the porter. He sent the porter to get some whisky and then held up Zimmerman, forcing him at the point of a revolver to open the safe, from which he took the package containing $25,000 sent by the Merchants' National Bank of St. Paul to the American Exchange Bank of Duluth.

Dahl, Fournier, after conviction, informed his counsel that Wesley was the man who shot the Dahls and that he, Fournier, did not arrive on the scene until after the crime had been committed, and that he hid his knowledge of the crime for fear that Wesley would kill him also. On the strength of this confession, Judge Martin, says, a new trial will be asked for Fournier.

THAW JURY IS ON THE RACK

JEROME INVESTIGATES REPORT THAT ONE OF THEM WAS "APPROACHED."

New York, April 20.—District Attorney Jerome has begun an investigation of a report that one of the jurors in the recent trial of Harry Thaw had been "approached" by a policeman before the trial closed.

Henry C. Brearley, one of the jurors, had an interview with the district attorney late yesterday at Mr. Jerome's office.

Later it was announced that several others of the Thaw jury would be asked to come to the district attorney's office to-day and tell anything they knew of the report that a policeman talked with a juror on one of the walks the jury took from the criminal courts building to the Broadway hotel.

The question of counsel for Harry Thaw has not been permanently settled. Clifford W. Hartridge gave out a formal statment in which he said the supposition that he is senior counsel was absolutely unwarranted. He said that at the present time there is no senior counsel in the Thaw case.

This statement was given out at Thaw's request, it is said, after a heated interview in the Tombs between the prisoner, A. R. Peabody and Daniel O'Reilly.

That Delphin M. Delmas will not under any consideration be one of the counsel in the next trial of Harry K. Thaw was the statement made last night by one of Mr. Delmas' closest friends.

GRIND OF THE LAW MILL

What Is Being Accomplished by the State Solons

St. Paul, April 12.—The Rockne bill for the regulation of railroad stock and bond issues was defeated in the house yesterday. There were 57 votes against the bill and 47 for it. The vote was taken after a long and earnest discussion, and the battle was one of the hardest fought in years. The bill was drawn by the attorney general and was intended to overcome the defects of the present law which was recently declared unconstitutional because it was a delegation of authority to the railroad commission. It was pointed out that the bill would affect only the roads that have their homes in the state and was therefore unjust.

Representative Rodenberg yesterday wanted the house to go into executive session to hear some scandal he desired to reveal in connection with the paint bill. But the house was busy and turned the matter over to a committee of nine, which is to hear the evidence he has to offer.

The committee of the whole approved the sheriff's salary bill. The bill does not relate to counties having a population of 35,000 or more.

The house appropriations committee reported the semi-centennial bill for indefinite postponement. The other two state fair bills, one providing an appropriation of $150,000 and the other for a loan of $250,000 for the purchase of land and improvement of the state fair grounds, was reported for passage. The committee also approved the bill for the purchase of additional ground for the capitol.

The house passed the bill permitting the organization of co-operative creameries for the purpose of selling their products.

In the Senate.

The bill authorizing the Minnesota Canal and Power company to divert the waters of the St. Louis river through a canal to Duluth for the purpose of utilizing the water power for generating electricity was indefinitely postponed in the senate after a spirited debate of over two hours.

The senate killed the bill appropriating $25,000 for providing a state exhibit at the Alaskan-Yukon-Pacific exposition, to be held in Seattle in 1909.

The municipal ownership bill was passed by the senate yesterday. Ten senators voted against the bill and thirty-four for it. The bill was passed by the house some time ago. It authorizes cities to own and operate or lease lighting, telephone, gas plants and street railway systems if the proposition receives three-fifths of the votes cast at the election.

The senate passed the bill providing for the drainage of land by the owner when the land cannot be drained without affecting other land.

Other bills passed: Legalizing bonds issued by village in excess of legal limitations in certain cases; authorizing the owners of submerged logs to raise them when intermingled with the logs of others; relating to the swamp land funds of the state; providing for the payment of fees to the state by savings banks and local building and loan associations.

St. Paul, April 13.—The house committee of the whole yesterday voted to report for passage the bill extending the primary election system to state officers. The bill, besides providing for the extension of the primary system to state officers, provides that the nominees for state offices, for United States senator, for congress and for the legislature shall meet and formulate the state platform and select the state central committee and its officers. The vote on the bill stood 66 to 19.

The bill to require all hangings to take place at the state prison was killed in committee of the whole.

The bill creating the state board of immigration was reported for passage by the committee of the whole. The bill provides for a board of five, composed of the governor, the auditor and the secretary of state and two others appointed by them. The board is to elect a commissioner of immigration.

The house yesterday passed the reciprocal demurrage bill for the third time. The corrections in the bill made by the conference committee were adopted, and the bill is now in shape to be signed by the governor.

The bill to prohibit a charge of more than 25 cents for a ten-word telegram between points in the state was advanced to the calendar.

Before the passage of this bill the house voted down the Putnam bill for the establishment of a new school for girls in Red Wing, four miles distant from the present school. The vote on this bill was 22 yeas and 59 nays. According to the bill passed the board of control is to select the superintendent and other officers, all of whom are to be women. A Good Recommendation.

William J. Flynn, the noted secret service agent, was discussing a certain German burglar alarm with a New York reporter.

"It was this alarm," said Mr. Flynn, with a laugh, "that a thick-set man called on a hardware dealer about.

"'I'd like to sell you, cheap, 400 burglar alarms,' the man said.

"'Are you a manufacturer?' the hardware dealer asked.

"'No, sir,' was the reply "I'm a burglar.'"

Not a Disbeliever.

"I suppose," remarked the dear girl, "that you do not believe in love at first sight?"

"Oh, yes I do," rejoined the old bachelor. "If men were gifted with second sight they would never fall in love."

How Suburbs Would Help Berlin.

If Berlin annexed all its suburbs after the fashion of Paris it would have about 3,000,000 inhabitants and would be the second city in size.

For the first time a cast iron repairer comes on the scene, as also do the addressing machine maker, the inventor of safety breathing appliances, the soluable coffee creator, the folding baby car constructor, the India rubber tile maker, the theatrical hatter and the maker of embalming fluid.—London World.

In and About the State

CLUB TO BUILD NEW ROAD.

Abandoned Bed of Great Northern Track to Be Utilized.

At a meeting of the Crookston Commercial club it was deicded to build a wagon road between Crookston and St. Hilaire, following the abandoned railroad track formerly used by the Great Northern. Secretary Brown reported that he had taken up the matter with the Great Northern and that the right of way could be secured from that road. The plan is to utilize the gravel which was used by the railroad as ballast for road bed, and a committee was appointed to raise the funds to build the road. The road will be about thirty miles in length and will open up a large territory for the merchants of Crookston.

A committee also was appointed to confer with the county commissioners in regard to getting ditch No. 60 opened up immediately. This ditch leads from the Northwestern state experiment farm to the Red Lake river and will be used in connection with an experiment which the federal government will make in tile draining on the farm this year.

If this tile draining proves a success it will revolutionize farming methods in the Red river valley. The work is to be in charge of Engineer Stewart of Washington, who spent last summer in the Northwest.

CITY WHISTLE BLAMED.

Actions Over Runaway Call for $20,000 Damages.

The city of Winona is made defendant in two actions for damages amounting to $20,000 because of the runaway accident on the high wagon bridge over the Mississippi river at that city last winter, which resulted in the death of James Nichols of Trempealeau and in the serious injury of Amelia Botzet. It is claimed that the team was frightened by the blowing of the fire whistle near the bridge, and also that the city had not provided the bridge with proper guard rails, so that when the sleigh struck the railing it broke and the two occupants of the vehicle were thrown to the ice, sixty feet below. Mrs. James Nichols brings action in the sum of $5,000 for the death of her husband, and August Botzet, the father of the girl, brings action for $15,000 for the injuries sustained by his daughter, claiming that they are of a serious and permanent nature.

WOMAN OF EIGHTY WANDERS.

Is Found in Woods Two Days After Disappearing.

Mrs. Legg, a woman nearly eighty years old, whose home is near Beaver, in Winona county, spent two days and two nights in the woods and fields without anything to eat or drink and without shelter. When found she was in a pitiable condition.

Last Friday afternoon Mrs. Legg went to a neighbor, Mrs. Harmon, for some pork. After she left there she was not seen again until Sunday evening. The disappearance of the woman led to the organization of searching parties Friday night, but no trace of her was found until Sunday afternoon. Then, at a point about four miles from her home, her basket, containing the meat she had borrowed, was found, and a little distance away, in a lonely ravine, the woman was discovered, sitting on a stone. She was so weak from lack of food and water that she could hardly stand and her mind was somewhat affected.

FISHES WITH PITCHFORK.

Twelve-pound Pickerel Is Landed by Small Boy.

Francis Hanifin, a six-year-old boy, captured a twelve-pound pickerel with a pitchfork in a brook running through his father's farm near Madelia.

The little chap noticed the big fish floundering along in the shallow water, and running to the house he donned his rubber boots, seized a pitchfork and started out to capture the finny monster. He waded into the brook and by cleverly manipulating the pitchfork managed to get the fish ashore after a hard struggle.

The fish was almost as long as the boy was tall.

PASTOR RESIGNS PULPIT.

Dr. George N. Davis of Mankato Leaves Charge.

Rev. George N. Davis, D. D., who has been pastor of the First Presbyterian chuch at Mankato for several years has tendered his resignation. No reason was given, and Dr. Davis' future plans are not known. His family is in Europe. A meeting of the congregation was held to accept his resignation.

Twice Gets Postoffice Job.

Mr. M. B. Johnson, who was appointed postmaster of Clarkfield, took charge of the office, succeeding W. B. Torgensen, who recently resigned. Mr. Johnson enjoys the exceptional distinction of twice having been appointed postmaster of the same office under different administrations, having held the office during President Cleveland's first administration in the early pioneer days of this community, when there were no Democrats between the Yellow Medicine and the Minnesota rivers.

RATES ON MILK REDUCED.

Railroad Commission Makes Out Maximum Schedule.

The railroad commission's order fixing a new schedule of milk and cream rates by express, which was filed recently, ends a long controversy which has been waged before the commission by conflicting interests. The express companies were willing for an adjustment, but not for a reduction in rates. The central creameries and milk companies and the farmers shipping to the cities wanted a reduction. The co-operative creameries and dairy interests of the small towns generally wanted cream rates raised, so as to give them an advantage over the hand separator concerns.

The commission's order makes a decided reduction in mik rates, but does not change the average rate on cream very materially. It is a maximum schedule, however, and the companies may grant lower rates at their option

The following table shows the rates fixed by the commission as a maximum for each distance:

St. Paul and Minneapolis will be treated as one city, the mileage to nearest point to govern rates.

These rates include the return of empty cans, which must be waybilled back to the forwarding station.

Necessary shippings tags and seals may be returned in cans without extra charge.

When rates for exact distance are not shown the rates for the next greater distance must apply.

HAMLINE IS PROSPEROUS.

College Year Will Close Under Favorable Auspices.

Hamline university's approaching commencement promises to be of more than usual interest as commencements go. The class to be graduated is a large one, numbering twenty-four, and has made a fine record for itself; by commencement day the new Carnegie library will be well under way, and by the same date, June 10, it is likely that the names of two new professors will be announced.

The name of one of the members of the teaching force is already known, being included in the 1907 catalogue, which is just being issued. This is Miss Mattie D. Winston of St. Paul, who will have a part in the mathematical work. The graduation of a large class, the pushing forward of the new library, the cornerstone of which may be laid about commencement time, and the enlargement of the faculty, all mark growth for the institution and will be cause for making the commencement a sort of jubilee occasion.

SAYS WIFE ELOPED.

Man Causes Arrest of Helpmeet and Her Alleged Companion.

Cupid did not reckon with the husband of Mrs. Ole Iverson of St. James when, it is alleged, he persuaded John P. Huson to yield to his love for the woman and elope with her to another part of the countryside, where they could continue their romance and incidentally work to keep away hunger that might mar their bliss. Mrs. Iverson took along her baby, a ten-month-old infant, it is charged, in her flight. Huson got work on a farm and when the officials went to arrest him they learned that Mrs. Iverson was employed by another farmer not far away. The employers said they had understood that the man and the woman were husband and wife. After their arrest, the pair were brought to Rochester and then taken to St. James.

BUYS LAND FOR ASYLUM.

Strip From Railroad to Anoka Hospital Grounds Is Secured.

A. Prescott of Oregan has sold to John Coleman, as superintendent of the Anoka state asylum for the insane, a strip of land on Rum river, extending north from the Northern Pacific tracks to the present asylum grounds and containing thirty-two acres, for $2,000. It is a valuable tract of land for the state to own, and will add greatly to the appearance and value of the asylum site.

THE FATAL GLOVE.

BY CLARA AUGUSTA

CHAPTER XVI.—(CONTINUED.)

"She gives me up! Margie renounces me! Strangers we must be henceforth! What does it all mean? Am I indeed awake, or is it only a painful dream?"

He read the few lines of the missive a third time. Something of the old dominant spirit of Archer Trevlyn came back to him.

"There is some misunderstanding. Margie has been told some dire falsehood!" he exclaimed, starting up. "I will know everything. She shall explain fully."

He seized his hat and hurried to her residence. The family were at breakfast, the servant said, who opened the door. He asked to see Miss Harrison.

"Miss Harrison left this morning, sir, in the early express," said the man, eyeing Trevlyn with curious interest.

"Went in the early train! Can you tell me where she has gone?"

"I cannot. Perhaps her aunt, Miss Farnsworth, or Miss Lee can do so."

"Very well;" he made a desperate effort to seem calm, for the servant's observant eye warned him that he was not acting himself. "Will you please ask Miss Lee to favor me with a few minutes of her time?"

Miss Lee came into the parlor where Archer waited, a little afterward. Archer, himself, was not more changed than she. Her countenance was pale, even to ghastliness, with the exception of a bright red spot on either cheek, and her eyes shone with such an unnatural light, that even Archer, absorbed as he was in his own troubles, noticed it. She welcomed him quietly, in a somewhat constrained voice, and relapsed into silence. Archer plunged at once upon what he came to ascertain.

"The servant tells me that Miss Harrison left New York this morning. I am very anxious to communicate with her. Can you tell me whither she has gone?"

"I cannot. She left before any of the family were up, and though she left notes for both her aunt and her business agent, Mr. Farley, she did not in either of them mention her destination."

"And did she not speak to you about it?"

"She did not. I spent a part of last evening with her, just before you came, but she said nothing to me of her intention. She was not quite well, and desired me to ask you to excuse her from going to the opera."

"And did you not see her this morning?"

"No. I have not seen her since I left her room to come down to you last night. When I returned from my interview with you, I tapped at her door—in fact, I tapped at it several times during the evening, for I feared she might be worse—but I got no reply, and supposed she had retired. No one saw her this morning, except Florine, her maid, and Peter, the coachman, who drove her to the depot."

"And she went entirely alone?"

"She did from the house. Peter took her in the carriage."

"From the house! But after that?" he asked, eagerly.

"Mr. Trevlyn," she said, coldly, "excuse me."

"I must know!" he cried; passionately grasping her arm; "tell me, did she set out upon this mysterious journey alone?"

"I must decline to answer you."

"But I will not accept any denial! Miss Lee, you know what Margie was to me. There has arisen a fearful misunderstanding between us. I must have it explained. Why will you trifle with me? You must tell me what you know."

"I do not wish to arouse suspicion, Mr. Trevlyn, which may have no foundation to rest on. Only for your peace of mind do I withhold any information I may possess on the subject."

"It is a cruel kindness. Tell me everything at once, I beg of you!"

"Then, if it distresses you, do not blame me; Peter saw Mr. Louis Castrani at the depot, and is confident he went in the same train, in the same car with Miss Harrison."

"Castrani! Great Heaven!" he staggered into a chair. "Is it possible? Margie, my Margie, that I thought so good and pure and truthful, false to me! It cannot, cannot be! I will not believe it!"

"I do not ask you to," said Alexandrine, proudly. "I insinuated nothing. I only replied to your question."

"Pardon me, Miss Lee. I am not quite myself this morning. I will go now. I thank you for what you have told me, and trust it will all be explained."

"I trust so," answered Miss Lee, turning to leave the room.

"Stay a moment! To what depot did Peter drive her?"

"The Northern, I think he said."

"Again I thank you, and good morning."

He hurried away, got into the first coach he came across, and was driven to the Northern depot.

He was somewhat acquainted with the ticket agent, and assuming as nonchalant an air as was possible in his present disturbed state, he strolled into the office. After a little indifferent conversation, he said.

"By the way, Harris, do you know Mr. Castrani, the young Cuban, who has turned the heads of so many of our fair belles? Some one was telling me he left town this morning."

"Castrani! Yes, I think so. He did leave for the north this morning in the early express. I marked his baggage for him. He had been hurried so in his preparations, he said, that he had no time for it."

"Indeed? It's a bore to be hurried. Where was he checked to?"

"Well, really, the name of the place has escaped me. Some little town in New Hampshire or Maine, I think. We do so much of this business that my memory is treacherous about such things."

"Were you speaking of Castrani?" asked Tom Clifford, a friend of Archer's, removing his cigar from his mouth. Deuced fine fellow! Wish I had some of his spare shillings. Though he's generous as a prince. Met him this morning just as he was coming down the steps of the Astor. Had to get up early to see after that confounded store of mine. Walker's too lazy to open it mornings."

"You met Mr. Castrani?" said Archer, referring to the point.

"Yes. He told me he was going away. Woman somewhere mixed up in the case. Said he expected to find one somewhere—well, hanged if I can tell where. There's always a woman at the bottom of everything."

"He did not mention who this one was?"

"Not he. But I must be going. It's nearly lunch time. Good morning."

Trevlyn stopped a few moments with Mr. Harris, and then went back to his rooms. He was satisfied. Hard as it was for him to believe it, he had no other alternative. Margie was false, and she had gone away from him under the protection of Castrani. He could have forgiven her anything but that. If she had ceased to love him, and had transferred her affections, he could still have wished her all happiness, if she had only been free and frank with him. But to profess love for him all the while she was planning to elope with another man, was too much! His heart hardened toward her.

If there had been, in reality, as he had at first had supposed, any misunderstanding between him and her, and she had gone alone, he would have followed her to the ends of the earth, and have had everything made clear. But as it was now, he would not pursue her an inch. Let her go! False and perfidious! Why should her flight ever trouble him?

But though he tried to believe her worthy of all scorn and contempt, his heart was still very tender of her. He kissed the sweet face of the picture he had worn so long in his bosom, before he locked it away from his sight, and dropped some tears that were no dishonor to his manhood, over the half-dozen elegant little trifles she had given him, before he committed them to the flames.

There was a nine days' wonder over Miss Harrison's sudden exodus. But her aunt was a discreet woman, and it was generally understood that Margie had taken advantage of the pause in the fashionable season to visit some distant relatives, and if any one coupled her flight and the departure of Castrani together, it was not made the subject of remark. Alexandrine kept what she knew to herself, and of course Archer Trevlyn did not proclaim his own desertion.

For a week, nearly, he managed to keep about, and at the end of that time he called at Mrs. Lee's. He wanted to question Alexandrine a little further. The idea possessed him that in some way she might be cognizant of Margie's destination. And though he had given the girl up, he longed desperately to know if she were happy. He had felt strangely giddy all day, and the heat of Mrs. Lee's parlors operated unfavorably upon him. He was sitting on a sofa conversing with that lady and her daughter, when suddenly he put his hand to his forehead, and sank back, pale and speechless.

In the wildest alarm, they called a physician, who put him to bed, and enjoined the severest quiet. Mr. Trevlyn, he said, had received a severe shock to his nervous system, and there was imminent danger of congestive fever of the brain.

His fears were verified. Archer did not rally, and on the second day he was delirious. Then the womanly nature of Alexandrine Lee came out and asserted itself. She banished all attendants from the sick room, and took sole charge herself of the sufferer. Not even her mother would she allow to take her place. When tempted by intense weariness to resign her post she would take that stained glove from her bosom, and the sight of it would banish all thought of admitting a stranger.

"No," she said to herself, "people in delirium speak of their most cherished secrets, and he shall not criminate himself. If he did that terrible deed, only I of all the world can bring a shadow of suspicion against him, and the secret shall never be revealed to any other."

So she sat the long days and longer nights away by the side of this man she loved so hopelessly, bathing his fevered brow, holding his parched hand, and lingering fondly over the flushed, unconscious face.

He sank lower and lower day by day—so very low that the physician said he could do no more. He must leave the case. There was nothing for it but to wait with patience the workings of nature.

At last the day came when the ravings of delirium subsided, and a deadly stupor intervened. The crisis of the disease. The sundown would decide, Dr. Grayson said; he would be better, or death would ensue.

Alexandrine heard his opinion in stony silence. She sat by the bed's head now, calm and silent; her powers of self-control were infinite. Her mother came in to watch for the change, as did several of Archer's friends, heretofore excluded. She was not afraid for them to come; there was no danger of Mr. Trevlyn criminating himself now. He had not spoken or moved for twelve hours.

The time passed slowly. The sun crept down the west. The ticking of the watch on the stand was all that broke the silence of the room. The last sun ray departed—the west flamed with gold and crimson, and the amber light flushed with the hue of health the white face on the pillow. Alexandrine thought she saw a change other than that the sunlight brought, and bent over him.

His eyes unclosed—he looked away from her to the vase of early spring flowers on the center-table. His lips moved. She caught the whispered word with a fierce pang at her heart:

"Margie."

The physician stepped forward, and sought the fluttering pulse. His face told his decision before his lips did.

"The crisis is passed. He will live."

Yes, he would live. The suspense was over. Alexandrine's labors were shared now, and Archer did not know how devotedly he had been tended—how he owed his very existence to her.

He mended slowly, but by the middle of May he was able to get out. Of course he was very grateful to the Lees, and their house was almost the only one he visited. Alexandrine was fitful and moody. Sometimes she received him with the greatest warmth, and then she would be cold and distant. She puzzled Archer strangely He wanted to be friends with her. He felt that he owed her an immense debt of gratitude, and he desired to treat her as he would a dear sister.

Perhaps it was because time hung so heavily on his hands, that Trevlyn went so frequently to Mrs. Lee's. Certainly he did not go to visit Alexandrine. We all know how the habit of visiting certain places grow upon us, without any particular cause, until we feel the necessity of going through with the regular routine every day. He was to blame for following up this acquaintance so closely, but he did it without any wrong intention. He never thought it possible that any one should dream of his being in love with Alexandrine.

But the world talked. They said it was a very pretty romance; Mr. Trevlyn had been deserted by his lady love, had fallen ill on account of it, had been nursed by one whom of course he would marry. Indeed, they thought him in duty bound to do so. In what other way could he manifest his gratitude?

Vague whispers of this reached Trevlyn's ear, but he gave them at first little heed. He should never marry, he said; it was sinful to wed without love. But as he saw Alexandrine's pale face and strangely distraught manner day by day, he came to feel as if he had in some way wronged her, though how he did not exactly understand.

One day he entered the sitting-room of Mrs. Lee with the freedom of a privileged visitor, without rapping, and found Alexandrine in tears. He would have retreated, but she had already seen him, and he felt that it would be better to remain. He spoke to her kindly.

"I trust nothing has occurred to distress you?" She looked up at him almost defiantly.

"Leave me!" she said, impetuously; "you, of all others, have no right to question me!"

"Pardon me!" he exclaimed, alarmed by her strange emotion, "and why not I question you?"

"Because you have caused me misery enough already—"

POSTOFFICE SECRECY.

Against the Rules for Letter-Carriers to Give Addresses.

It is not generally known that Uncle Sam looks upon the address or whereabouts of one of his citizens as an inviolable secret. Such, however, is the case, says the New York World.

A New Yorker who had been out of the city for some time found upon his return, a few days ago, that one of his intimate friends had changed his residence without leaving his exact new address. All he could gather was that his friend now lived in a flat on the north side of a certain street.

When he arrived at the block in question he found to his dismay that every house in it was a flat house. He would have to go from door to door until he found his friend's name over one of the door-bells.

He had not proceeded far when he met a letter-carrier making his usual delivery. Here, he thought, was the man who could save him a lot of time and trouble.

"Yes, sir," replied the postman, in response to his query. "I know the party very well. But I am sorry to say I cannot give you his number. It is against the rules."

The same secrecy is observed at the post office. The postal address of anybody will not be given by the federal authorities even to a state officer. This rule is in accordance with the general principle that a man's dealings with the government are of a confidential nature.

Antiquity of Mosaic Floors.

A SOCIAL LEADER OF KANSAS CITY

Attributes Her Excellent Health to Pe-ru-na.

MRS. W. H. SIMMONS.

MRS. W. H. SIMMONS, 1119 E. 8th St., Kansas City, Mo., member of the National Annuity Association writes:

"My health was excellent until about a year ago, when I had a complete collapse from overdoing socially, not getting the proper rest, and too many late suppers. My stomach was in a dreadful condition, and my nerves all unstrung.

"I was advised by a friend to try Peruna, and eventually I bought a bottle. I took it and then another, and kept using it for three months.

"At the end of that time my health was restored, my nerves no longer troubled me, and I felt myself once more and able to assume my social position. I certainly feel that Peruna is deserving of praise."

There are many reasons why society women break down, why their nervous systems fail, why they have systemic or pelvic catarrh. Indeed, they are especially liable to these ailments. No wonder they require the protection of Peruna. It is their shield and safeguard.

A Slight Loss.

Giving an account of the assassination of a certain M. Durand, the reporter proceeded thus:

"The murderer was evidently in search of money, but most fortunately M. Durand had lodged all his funds the day before in the bank, so at that, after all, he lost nothing but his life."

Flies On It.

Traveler (at a station restaurant)—You say there is a piece of cheese on that plate? I can't see anything but flies.

Walter—Well, there must be some cheese underneath, else the flies wouldn't settle there.

Is Slow Traveler.

A New Haven man was praising the late Judge David Torrence of Derby, Conn.

"Judge Torrence," he said, "uttered many an epigram from the bench. In a case concerning a noise nuisance a scientist was once testifying before him about the speed of sound.

"'Sound,' said the man, 'travels at the rate of 400 yards a second.'

"'All sound?' asked Judge Torrence

"'All,' replied the scientist.

"The judge smiled.

"'I'm sure you're wrong,' he said. 'I have noticed a great difference between the speed of certain kinds of sound. Thus, slander travels at the rate of quite 1,000 yards a second; flattery, 500 yards, while truth makes only a few feet a second, and, slow as its progress is, truth often fails to reach the goal, no matter how short the distance.'"

ROMANTIC DEVONSHIRE.

The Land Made Famous by Philpotts' Novels.

Philpotts has made us familiar with romantic Devonshire, in his fascinating novels, "The River," "Children of the Mist," etc. The characters are very human; the people there drink coffee with the same results as elsewhere. A writer at Rock House, Orchard Hill, Bideford, North Devon, states:

"For 30 years I drank coffee for breakfast and dinner but some 5 years ago I found that it was producing indigestion and heart-burn, and was making me restless at night. These symptoms were followed by brain fag and a sluggish mental condition.

"When I realized this, I made up my mind to quit drinking coffee and having read of Postum, I concluded to try it. I had it carefully made, according to directions, and found to my agreeable surprise at the end of a week, that I no longer suffered from either indigestion, heart-burn, or brain fag, and that I could drink it at night and secure restful and refreshing sleep.

"Since that time we have entirely discontinued the use of the old kind of coffee, growing fonder and fonder of Postum as time goes on. My digestive organs certainly do their work much better now than before, a result due to Postum Food Coffee, I am satisfied.

"As a table beverage we find (for all the members of my family use it) that when properly made it is most refreshing and agreeable, of delicious flavor and aroma. Vigilance is, however, necessary to secure this, for unless the servants are watched they are likely to neglect the thorough boiling which it must have in order to extract the goodness from the cereal." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."
